Pipeline to run 50 miles in county

The proposed Navigator CO2 Ventures Heartland Greenway liquid carbon dioxide pipeline is planned to pass through 50 miles of private property in Lee County. A public hearing required by Iowa law is set for Dec. 8 at Small Grand Things south of West Point.

BY CHUCK VANDENBERG PCC FDITOR

LEE COUNTY - The proposed carbon recapture pipeline that is being proposed through Iowa could put 50 more miles of additional pipeline through the county.

Lee County already has the Dakota Access Pipeline running from the northwest corner diagonally through the county. It also has anhydrous pipelines running north and south with additional piping expected around Fort Madison in the next few years.

Now a company called Navigator CO2 Ventures, LLC is looking to build another lengthy pipeline for the capture and sequestration of liquid carbon dioxide through about 885 miles of Iowa land. The company would capture carbon dioxide produced by companies through Iowa and four other states and transport it via the pipeline to Illinois where it would be sequestered.

Company officials are working with the Army Corps of Engineers to determine the point in Lee County where the pipeline would cross the Mississippi River.

The pipeline will serve biofuel producers and ethanol plants including Big River Ethanol in West Burlington and OCI Iowa Fertilizer Company in Wever.

We must now find our way

 ${f F}$ ort Madison took a punch in the face Wednesday.

And for someone who knows what it's like to get punched in the face, it's a rare occasion to just stand there and take it.

Not only did we suffer the second murder in our community in less than a month, but this one essentially claimed the life of two. One tragically to a gun shot, and the other will, almost as tragically, likely spend a good chunk of the rest of his life in prison.

Both were youth in our community. According to reports and charges from the incident, 17-year-old Dimari Meredith allegedly shot and killed 15-year-old Deeunta Ceaser at Ceaser's grandmother's house on the west side of town. The shot rang quickly across the census of Fort Madison HIgh School and teachers, coaches, and administrators prepared for a day full of engaging with our children to deal with the tragedy.

Other media outlets descended on Fort Madison High School on Thursday, but we ran the story from the local police perspective and stayed at arm's length from the school administrators. It would probably have added something to the story, but our sense of the despair of yet another lost student moved us to leave them to the students that needed them more than the readership.

So you get me on a Sunday morning with a furrowed brow and a feeling that this wasn't just a bad decision enveloped in unfortunate circumstances. It was that. But we can't help but think the bigger issue however is a failing of a community and a society et. al. Meredith, and he is innocent until proven guilty, but if eventually convicted wasn't born wanting to do something like this. In 17 years of experiences and choices he was moved to do this. As a community of just over 9,000 people we must start thinking now, even though it is far too late for Ceaser and Meredith, why this type of a boil over takes place.

What are we missing, or just turning a deaf ear and a blind eye away from?

I can't help but think we all shoulder some of this blame. Maybe we're too focused on broadband expansion, skills gaps, unemployment, building marinas and trails, going to football games, and writing editorials, to see what's really happening. But I don't think so.

We have to, as Fort Madison Mayor Matt Mohrfeld said, have an eye toward the future. But we can't be ignorant of the present.

Are we listening enough to our children, realizing the pressures of their daily lives, and doing all we can to bring forces to bear on those issues? Apparently not.

The death of that beautiful young boy should shake us all. Not scare us from building a new 9-hole disc golf course at Ivanhoe, just a few blocks from the shooting and where another shooting took place this spring. Or pickleball courts at Victory Park, or running on trails throughout the day.

The recent violence should tell us that we must keep moving forward with those projects to enhance the quality of life that tends to keep issues like this at bay.

But we also must engage with our children more, and right now it's hard to see just what that looks like. I keep going back to the analogy that the pandemic opened our eyes to how poor our Internet access was locally. There was talk about it before COVID came, but it really showed us we needed something more. The issue then became part of nearly all economic development conversations, and now we're making real strides to improve that access in the very near future.

But it happened because we realized it was failing so many. It's not that much different with this recent violence. There has to be a realization here as well that we're just not sniffing it out.

A story broke the same day that two school aged kids tracked down a Spanish teacher in Fairfield, attacked her and left her for dead.

Some people just want to see the world burn. We have that. We'll always have that. But crimes like these have to make us look in our collective mirrors and start conversations with each other about where the change comes about.

Brianna Kramer-Riesberg is working under a grant at Lee County Health Department to peel back the layers of some of these issues. We're not liking what we're finding, and some in all fairness, have been looking for a lot longer than others. Maybe there's something here that requires a stronger effort, with more people and even greater collaboration. What that looks like can only be brought into focus with heavy conversations, resources, and a community movement. We have students killing students, and kids killing a teacher. I'm not sure there's ever been a more critical time for a community to examine a problem, define an approach, and execute a plan.

We have to start listening to our children... and become their better angels.

My heart is already broken, but it bled heavier Thursday as I put the two pictures of Meredith and Ceaser next to each other on my computer screen. These two were babies in our hands.

I don't know all the details of this crime. Honestly, I didn't even want to know. I knew enough. Several hundred students at FMHS may know the details or at least have played this trial out on social media already.

What I do know is we are a community of one. We must now find our way - to remain a community of one. Chuck Vandenberg is the editor and co-owner of Pen City Current and can be reached at charles.v@pencitycurrent.com.

Brother was a Vietnam veteran, military hero

My oldest brother was 14 years old when I was born. My first memory of him was when he came home on leave from the Army, so good looking in his uniform. He was a paratrooper with the 101st Airborne Division. You better believe he was my hero. I loved hanging on his strong arms. He would swing my sister and me around by the arms until we were all dizzy.

He was a John Wayne type of figure: quiet, strong, quick with a laugh, always doing what was right because it was the right thing to do. I remember him giving his 1950 Ford to my parents when he was going overseas and didn't need it. He also gave us our first television, a black-andwhite console with a rotary dial for which I got yelled at by my parents for spinning too fast.

My sister and I took a Greyhound Bus to Ft. Campbell, Kentucky to stay with my brother for a week with his wife and two kids—soon to be three. They lived in a trailer that he called their "Little tin house." We watched him jump out of an airplane, the blue sky filled with white mushrooms.

We knew when he was hurt from a jump gone bad. We knew the military wanted to medically discharge him, but he resisted and was allowed to stay. He was tough and determined. We knew when he was promoted to Warrant Officer. (He made light of it.) We knew when he went to Germany, and Hawaii, and Vietnam. He assured us that he was far removed from the fighting, that he was high in the

We didn't call it "deployment" then. He was "sent."

My brother was an avid letter writer and we loved getting letters from him. They were keepsakes, his penmanship revealing so much of his personality.

His legal name was John, but he was called Jack, like my dad. Therefore, when our son was born, to continue the family tradition, we named him John, to be called Jack, like Jack Kennedy, who was John.

After 20 years in the Army, my brother retired and his wife and he bought an acreage in Canon City, Colorado, next to the Royal Gorge. We loved going there. We rode horses and my kids shot BB guns and we walked across the Royal Gorge bridge. My daughter broke her arm falling off a horse. Uncle Jack had a mule that heehawed.

Life was normal for the Swarm family. My brother was a great wood worker, and we talked about insulation and fertilizer and front-wheel drive versus rear wheel. What I'm trying to say is, my brother was the most normal person I knew. He loved his family, he loved life, he was a great guy. When I heard he was dying of cancer (Agent Orange) I wanted to see him. But COVID got in the way and we couldn't see each other. Finally, with vaccinations, I was allowed. He was weak and frail, but still the same Jack. He could no longer hold a pen to write letters, so I offered to do it for him. He would dictate, I would write for him on my laptop.

I told Jack I wanted to write his story. He was surprised but opened up and told me the most blood thirsty, wanton tale of hand-to-hand combat, enemy atrocities, and his involvement in Cambodia and the Ho Chi Minh Trail. He also told me that Jesus Christ had entered his bedroom, wrapped His arms around him, and forgave him. Jesus was waiting for him in heaven and he looked forward to seeing Him.

Jack then proceeded to dictate the most wonderful, beautiful letters to me for our family. His hands could no longer hold a pen but they could emphasize words.

I was and still am shocked beyond belief. My whole worldview changed. I had no idea about his involvement in the horrific fighting in Vietnam. He kept it all to himself, inside him, as if nothing had ever happened.

John Swarm, to be called Jack, died on the 4th of July.

He was my brother, he was a hero, he was a veteran. Have a good story? Call or text Curt Swarm in Mt. Pleasant at 319-217-0526, find him on Facebook, email him at curtswarm@yahoo.com, or visit his website at www.empty- nest-words-photos-and-frames.com.

Miller-Meeks says Biden is infringing on medical decisions

On Thursday, the Biden Administration took another step toward dictating the medical choices of private citizens.

The November 4th ruling by the Department of Labor's Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) requiring certain employers to develop mandatory vaccination policies will harm small businesses and exacerbate the current labor and supply chain crises.

The mandate would force businesses with 100 or more employees to require employees to be vaccinated or submit to weekly testing and wear a face-covering in the workplace. The rule, which will affect more than 80 million Americans, imposes $14,000 fines on employers for each violation. Along with the Administration's policies paying Americans to not work, this rule will have a negative impact on the current labor shortage.

According to a September surveny from the National Federation of Independent Business, a majority of small firms say they have job openings they are unable to fill. The Conference Board CEO Confidence Survey showed that the percentage of companies stating they have difficulty finding qualified candidates went up from 57% in the second quarter of 2021 to 74% in the third. The Bureau of Labor Statistics ratio of open jobs to hires, which helps calculate the average time of hiring, is at a series high, as is the rate at which workers voluntarily quit their jobs.

Over the last year and a half, the current labor shortage has caused an unprecedented backlog in our supply chain. This has led to higher prices of consumer goods, and in many cases completely empty shelves at the grocery store. Global supply chains are breaking down, goods are backlogged at our seaports, and new shortages are sweeping the nation.

Large numbers of companies pointed to supply-chain constraints as a drag on earnings. There are growing signs that issues like port congestion, the difficult of hiring truck drivers, slowing supplier deliveries, and rising costs for raw materials and components such as semiconductors are affecting the broader economy. These supply chain issues will only be exacerbated by the Administration's policies.

As a doctor, former President of the Iowa Medical Society, and former director of the Iowa Department of Public Health, I have researched the efficacy and effectiveness of each of the three vaccines and I made my personal decision to get vaccinated. I have encouraged others to be vaccinated and administered vaccines across the Second District, but I still believe that vaccination should be a decision by the patient and their physician.

Americans should choose whether to be vaccinated, not forced.

From the Front/Ag News

According to the spokesperson from Navigator, the pipeline would traverse about 50 miles in Lee County with offshoots that appear from the map above to have connections at IFC, and Big River in Des Moines County. However, officials have yet to confirm those proprietary connection points.

"The Heartland Greenway carbon capture system will initially be servicing nearly 20 emission sources across the project footprint, anchored by Valero's facilities in Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, and South Dakota," according to a company spokesperson.

"Navigator CO2 Ventures respects the decision of its counterparties to remain confidential until their own public disclosures are made regarding their involvement with the system. We would expect those over the coming weeks and months."

Public meetings have been planned in both counties. Lee County's will take place Dec. 8 at Small Grand Things south of West Point.

The pipeline would vary in size from 6 to 24 inches and would be buried at a minimum of five feet from the top of the pipe.

The project carries an initial total price tag of approximately $3 billion, but officials didn't specify what that investment would look like in Lee County. Economic impact statements are currently being compiled by Navigator officials.

The company must first hold the public hearing through the Iowa Utilities Board before it can speak to any private landowners about easement acquisitions.

"Navigator has a reputation for executing these projects the right way and values its relationships with all stakeholders, especially landowners," the spokesperson said.

"Under Iowa law and regulatory authority granted to the Iowa Utilities Board, Heartland Greenway is not able to have any conversation or negotiation with landowners regarding compensation until after a public informational meeting is held in each of the counties the proposed sequestration system will traverse."

The Heartland Greenway's first phase is projected to commence initial service in late 2024 to early 2025 and span approximately 1,300 miles across five Midwest states.

Company officials claim the Heartland Greenway pipeline would have the capacity to store 15 million metric tons of carbon dioxide annually, equal to the emissions put out by approximately 3.2 million cars.

USDA offers pandemic help for organic crop producers

WASHINGTON - The U.S. Department of Agriculture will provide pandemic assistance to cover certification and education expenses to agricultural producers who are certified organic or transitioning to organic. USDA will make $20 million available through the new Organic and Transitional Education and Certification Program (OTECP) as part of USDA's broader Pandemic Assistance for Producers initiative, which provides new, broader and more equitable opportunities for farmers, ranchers and producers.

During the COVID-19 pandemic, certified organic and transitional operations faced challenges due to loss of markets, and increased costs and labor shortages, in addition to costs related to obtaining or renewing their organic certification, which producers and handlers of conventionally grown commodities do not incur. Transitional operations also faced the financial challenge of implementing practices required to obtain organic certification without being able to obtain the premium prices normally received for certified organic commodities.

Eligible Expenses

OTECP funding is provided through the Coronavirus Aid, Relief, and Economic Security Act (CARES Act). Certified operations and transitional operations may apply for OTECP for eligible expenses paid during the 2020, 2021 and 2022 fiscal years. For each year, OTECP covers 25% of a certified operation's eligible certification expenses, up to $250 per certification category (crop, livestock, wild crop, handling and State Organic Program fee). This includes application fees, inspection fees, USDA organic certification costs, state organic program fees and more.

Crop and livestock operations transitioning to organic production may be eligible for 75% of a transitional operation's eligible expenses, up to $750, for each year. This includes fees charged by a certifying agent or consultant for pre-certification inspections and development of an organic system plan.

For both certified operations and transitional operations, OTECP covers 75% of the registration fees, up to $200, per year, for educational events that include content related to organic production and handling in order to assist operations in increasing their knowledge of production and marketing practices that can improve their operations, increase resilience and expand available marketing opportunities. Additionally, both certified and transitional operations may be eligible for 75% of the expense of soil testing required under the National Organic Program (NOP) to document micronutrient deficiency, not to exceed $100 per year.

Applying for Assistance

Signup for 2020 and 2021 OTECP will be Nov. 8, 2021, through Jan. 7, 2022. Producers apply through their local Farm Service Agency (FSA) office and can also obtain one-on-one support with applications by calling 877-508-8364. Visit farmers.gov/otecp to learn more.
