AMBULANCE: With 90 days left, officials scrambling for 2020-21 county service

EMS may not renew contract

BY CHUCK VANDENBERG

FOLLUO

Chief Joey Herren are working on getting transport licenses because right now they don't have one. He said Keokuk has an old hazmat vehicle they could "throw a cot in", but Fort Madison doesn't have any type of rig.

Rose said any license they get wouldn't include the county at this point, unless the supervisors gave them the green light to go after a county-wide license.

"At this point Joey doesn't even have a rig. We're not saying we wouldn't be willing, but we don't know where we would get any funds for rigs and equipment. If you give us the green lights we will absolutely try to cover what we can in the county," Rose said.

"But if you lose Lee County Ambulance and their license and/

LEE COUNTY – Lee County officials today are looking at what it would take to secure another year of ambulance service for the county.

The Lee County Board of Supervisors called a second emergency meeting in less than two weeks Friday morning to address shortfalls in the Lee County ambulance service revenues.

Lee County Supervisor Gary Folluo said he was going to make calls today to find out what it would cost the county to secure Lee County Emergency Medical Service, or another service with a ground license, for one year starting July 1.

The meeting Friday morning included elected officials from the county, county staff, fire chiefs from Fort Madison and Keokuk and LeeComm dispatch staff.

Keokuk Fire Chief Gabe Rose said he and Fort Madison Fire

Reynolds gets emotional at Friday presser

BY CHUCK VANDENBERG
PCC EDITOR

DES MOINES – The Iowa Department of Public Health (IDPH) has been notified of 56 additional positive cases of Iowans with COVID-19, for a total of 235 positive cases. There have been a total of 3,740 negative tests to date, which includes testing reported by the State Hygienic Lab and other labs.

The Thursday positives from the state account for 28 different counties around Iowa. The state also saw two more deaths for a total of three to date as of Friday. The state on Friday had 970 tests available.

According to IDPH, two Iowans with COVID-19 passed away last night, one elderly adult (81+ years) from Poweshiek County and one older adult (61-80 years) from Allamakee County. This brings the total COVID-19 deaths in Iowa to three.

At Friday's press conference Gov. Kim Reynolds talked with emotion

Two private companies have interest in ambulance contract or employees, we don't have neighboring communities that could help. Say you have a wreck in the county, we can't transport those people. We can put bandages on them, but who would take them to the hospital?"

Supervisor Matt Pflug asked if the ambulance service had yet answered the question as to whether or not they were going to sign another contract.

Folluo said it was his understanding that they weren't going to sign up again. Rose also said based on a conversation he had with the ambulance service, it was not their intention to continue the contract.

But Lee County Auditor Denise Fraise said she received an email from Lee County EMS outlining what rate structures would look like next year, which she said baffled her.

"I was taken completely off guard by that, but I would go with what Gary says - that they're not going to go on," Fraise said.

Lee County Attorney Ross Braden said despite the company coming up with revenues to meet payroll this week, they are still in dire financial shape and it could very well be a week-to-week situation until the contract expires June 30.

Board Chair Ron Fedler said he fielded calls for about three hours Thursday night from residents who were hearing the ambulance service could fold any day, and that EMTs there are looking for work because of the situation.

Fedler also asked Braden if the ambulance service is under any obligation to reimburse the county for additional funds provided through the contract. Braden said those funds are discretionary contributions and are not considered a loan, therefore do not need to be paid back.

Folluo said the county is 90 days away from the end of the contract and now they are basically looking for someone to take over July 1st.

"We're a week into this thing and we're being asked to come up with a resolution or a summary of what our options are, which is taking other counties 12 to 18 months to do," Folluo said.

"We're kind of crash-coursing this thing and we need to make sure our i's are dotted and t's are crossed and there's a lot of work to do yet."

Fedler talked about forming a task force with reps from the cities and county emergency responders and elected officials. However, a motion was never made. An ad hoc committee has been taking part in informational meetings over the past two weeks.

Folluo said he didn't know if a task force was needed at this point. Herren cautioned the group about having too many people on a committee bogging down progress due to the short time line the county is facing in securing a service.

He also said that the Public Safety Answering Point board and LeeComm dispatch was on board with helping take on dispatching duties.

Travis Solem, LeeComm director said he was willing to meet with any groups and dispatch was ready to move forward. Folluo said having LeeComm handle dispatch services for the ambulance would save the service money.

Folluo said two private companies, CARE out of Iowa City, and Global Medical Response/AirEvac have expressed interest in providing service to Lee County.

Folluo said CARE just signed a contract to provide services in Jefferson County for less than $400,000 a year, but he pointed out that Jefferson County has their own county hospital where all patients are transported, and it's a smaller county than Lee County.

Herren said officials with the Burlington Fire Department were at Fort Madison City Hall Friday morning outlining how that fire department gets revenue to support its ambulance service for Des Moines County.

"We've got people up there in that meeting now," Herren said. "I don't have those answers right now, but I'll have them today."

Fraise said she liked the idea of hearing what Des Moines County was doing.

The board did pass a motion for Folluo to contact Lee County EMS or another company to see what it would take to provide service to the county for one year. That motion passed 5-0 with Folluo voting "reluctantly - aye".

This year the county has earmarked $466,000 including the $36,000 that was provided last week to cover payroll. In January, Lee County EMS Director Bill Young, asked the supervisors to increase supplemental funding to $500,000.

Folluo said figures being talked about in his conversations with Lee County EMS are now in the $750,000 to $1 million range.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

WP official says now is time to buy local

Dear Editor:

Many of the businesses throughout Iowa and the United States, including our local businesses here in West Point are remaining open to serve the public's needs to successfully avoid the devastation of the COVID-19 virus. Not only are many of these businesses essential to our needs in fighting the coronavirus but are also critical to the owners' livelihoods. Community support from us now is vital to the future financial health of these businesses and whether these struggling businesses will still be viable when we need to rely on them.

We all know that the policemen, firemen, doctors, nurses, etc. are our heroes and do a miraculous job serving us daily. But did you know that the private sector businesses are staying open daily; eager to provide the products you need every day and put themselves at risk doing so? These essential needs stores such as groceries, gas, vehicle repair, restaurants plumber, electricians, manufacturers and so on are just as key to fighting this community emergency as the public sector.

Please buy local and buy small town. West Point businesses, except those closed through Iowa Governor Proclamation, are open and eager to serve.

A status report of monitoring and testing of COVID-19 in Iowa is provided by IDPH and can be found here. In addition, a public hotline has been established for Iowans with questions about COVID-19. The line is available 24/7 by calling 2-1-1 or 1-800-244-7431. The state of Iowa has started sharing the number of negative tests conducted at outside labs, and is providing additional information on the conditions of those infected with COVID-19.

Governor says order to shelter in place isn't needed about getting the people of Iowa back to work. At one point the Governor spoke in a broken voice as she talked about the resiliency of the Iowa people. The Governor has been conducting press conferences via her Facebook page and YouTube three to four times per week to update Iowans on the state's activities and plans.

Several reporters pressed the issue of a shelter in place order, but Reynolds said the data doesn't support a shelter in place. She said that some hospitals are even asking her to not implement the order.

"We have to make sure we are taking every possible action to preserve PPE (personal protective equipment) and we have all hands on deck to meet the needs of our health care providers and first responders," Reynolds said.

"I also have hospitals that have sent letters that don't want a shelter in place, saying that would only exacerbate what we are trying to do. So there are people on both sides of the issue."

Reynolds said New York Governor Andrew Cuomo indicated this morning that he wished he hadn't issued the order.

Reynolds continues to hold the line that Iowans don't need an order to know what is right.

"I believe Iowans don't need an order. I believe they know what to do," she said.

"It's not consistent across the state, we have taken measures all along that are based on data the Department of Public Health has provided to me in coordination with CDC. And I will continue to operate in that manner so I'm not just reacting to things."

Dr. Ann Lebo, the state's new director of the Department of Education, said she has convened a continuous learning task force on Wednesday focusing on pathways to provide schools with resources for online and distance learning during the state's emergency and said guidance on that would be going out Friday.
