Braden wants four full-time county attorneys

County attorney says current budget will be enough for three

FORT MADISON - If Lee County Attorney Ross Braden can sway Lee County Supervisors, the county will move from currently having two full-time attorneys to four full-time attorneys with one focused solely on juvenile court cases. Two weeks ago at a regular Lee County Board of Supervisors meeting, Braden approached the board about the possibility of transitioning retiring Assistant County Attorney Bruce McDonald's position to a full-time position. McDonald is at part-time status with the county, as is Fort Madison Attorney Mio Santiago, because the two both hold private practices, McDonald in Keokuk and Santiago in Fort Madison. County code doesn't permit full-time county attorneys to hold private practice positions while on county payroll.

Braden wants to convert McDonald's spot to a full-time at the same $81,000 salary. Santiago's assistant county attorney salary is $65,000. Braden said Santiago is working 20 to 25 hours per week on county cases. Braden also has Jonathan Stensvaag as 1st Assistant County Attorney. By converting McDonald's position to full-time, that would give the County Attorney's office three

Monday evening fire damages west-end home

Four fire departments work to extinguish chimney fire

BY CHUCK VANDENBERG
PCC EDITOR

FORT MADISON - A Wednesday evening fire has left a Clearview Heights home with smoke and fire damage.

LeeComm dispatched Montrose firefighters to 2648 Clearview Heights where smoke was reported in the crawl space of the home, according to Kent Brisby with the Montrose Fire Department.

Brisby said a chimney flue may have malfunctioned causing heat to build up in the chimney and then eventually caught fire.

"When we first got there there was a small tent of smoke in a crawl space. We went out to get something out of the truck and when we turned around smoke was coming from the eaves, It turned that fast," Brisby said.

He said the chimney was cement and could also have been plugged up and when it broke into flames it was initially contained in the chimney itself but eventually spread inside nearby walls.

The home, owned by Jason Lampe, suffered major smoke damage and damage to walls and drywall near the chimney.

"We had to tear up some walls to get to the fire, but the flames were contained. It did suffer heavy smoke

Original director says facility filled with warmth

facility has progressed over time. She was director for 19 months from 1988 to 1990.

“It’s just got warmth and that’s what I wanted,” she said. “The residents are well-cared for and the leadership has done things as they should have. Memory Care has become a more prominent focus and aging and they’ve done just a wonderful job. What I’m motivated about is how well the people are cared for. If that’s done right then the environment is the support to great care. But you’ve got to have great staff taking care of great people.”

Clairmont said when the company first took over the property she was overwhelmed at the work that would need to be done to convert it to a residential care facility.

“What I thought about when I work first walked into this building and we had tile everywhere - I was just thinking ‘How am I going to make this residential’. Hospitals are very hard to renovate. It was lot to bite off because it was so big, it was a massive undertaking.”

The facility prior to 1988 was owned by the Fort Madison Community Hospital. Clairmont said the hospital had budgeted about $300,000 to bring the building down, but they ended up selling to the company for $1. She said the only thing she added to the building at the time was the atrium off the dining room.

She said the original open house 30 years ago had 4,000 guests come through.

“People were lined up all the way around the street and we had enough food for every single person. Lynn told me at that time I wasn’t local and she said I had no idea how big that was going to be. She was right.”

Hoyer said she doesn’t know of anyone who remembers every person’s name in the facility, but she said

Three different directors of the Kensington got together at the 30th anniversary Thursday night. From left, former director Lynn Hoyer, current director Leia Morrison, and The Kensington’s original director Jayne Clairmont spent time talking together and with residents about the assisted living center’s history.

Clairmont had been reciting names from 30 years ago. Morrison said she was impressed with the number of people that had come through to see the facility, which was at about 200 at 5 p.m. The open house ran until 7 p.m.

She said the core values of the company and the facility are what keeps the community interested and supportive.

“I think the one thing that has traveled throughout time here has been the one core value of the company and that’s treating people like family,” she said. “That culture has been constant and we will continue to carry that on. The company is really focused on caring for everyone that not only works here, but lives here. We focus hard to make sure we have a lot of options and opportunities for people that want to live here.”

Morrison is just closing in on her first full year with The Kensington, but said she can see some of the history that has taken place over three decades.

“It’s great we get to offer some history here. Each floor has history on it and the majority of the people who live here, work here and visit here have some piece of history here. Whether they were born here or had loved one’s born here and that’s nice too,” she said.

“I think it’s nice the community has this interest and I think that a lot of people want to come in and see how the facility has changed,” Morrison said.

He said in the long-term, he would also like to convert Santiago's position to full-time and then at that point use one of the four full-time attorneys to handle just the juvenile cases throughout the county. Braden said he thinks he can attract a strong attorney to the county at Santiago's $65,000 salary.

"I've taken some initial looks at the numbers and I think I can do it within my budget for the rest of this year," Braden said. "Bruce's last day with the county is Dec. 31 and I want to have someone picked and on the ground running conflict-free on Jan. 1. The person I have in mind is a seasoned attorney, not quite a Bruce, but a very good attorney and it would be my recommendation that he come in at Bruce's current salary."

Braden said the county needs a seasoned attorney to fill Bruce's shoes.

"Bruce is a workhorse and is working almost full-time hours. and losing him is going to be a big blow to our office as far as having to absorb that caseload," Braden said. "It only makes sense, in my opinion, if we can get a full-time person with experience for the same amount we're paying Bruce, we should do that. It's already in the budget."

He said the board has the authority to determine what staffing looks like in the county as well, as the budget for the department.

"Ultimately they get the say in the number of staff we have and it rests solely with them as far as

“It only makes sense, in my opinion, if we can get a full-time person with experience for the same amount we're paying Bruce, we should do that. It's already in the budget.”

-Ross Braden
Lee County Attorney

restructuring the office to how many deputies I get and what amount of money they're willing to allocate in the budget for that," Braden said. "Our case load, in my opinion, is such that it really justifies needing the full-time help and that will make for a stronger, more balanced, cohesive office. That would mean these full-time attorneys' sole focus would be county work and prosecution and it takes out the possibility for running a private practice which can be time demanding, as well."

He said if the board does allow him to transition Santiago's part-time position to full-time, he would open that position to applicants. If the board approves Braden's plans, there would no longer be any part-time county attorneys on county payroll.

Supervisors indicated on Tuesday that they weren't sure how the budget would look for the 2019-20 fiscal year. Since two of the supervisors, Don Hunold and Rick Larkin, were absent, Supervisor Ron Fedler wanted to table the discussion until all five board members could be part of the discussion.

Supervisor Gary Fol-luo was concerned that making the move would require additional funding in the next fiscal year and wanted Lee County Auditor Denise Fraise to see if Braden could be available at the next meeting to answer some more questions about the move.

Braden said he may make a request for additional funding in the next fiscal year, but it wouldn't be a large request.

"I don't think I would be asking for any more than $5,000 as it really depends on who I would get. If I ask for another $5,000 it might be to add on $2,500 each because I want to pay them well enough to stay in Lee County. We pay our part-time better than full-time assistant attorneys in other counties," Braden said.

Des Moines County currently has six full-time attorneys in that county attorney's office with a county population of 39,400. Lee County currently has one full-time attorney and two part-time attorneys for a population of 34,200.
