Local law enforcement including Fort Madison Police, Lee County Sheriff's Department, Des Moines County Sheriff's Department, and Iowa State Patrol were still searching for the driver of this Chevrolet Sunday. The driver was wanted by Des Moines County before getting into Fort Madison where he collided with a Lee County Sheriff's vehicle disabling it near the corner of Avenue F and 10th Street. Below, Fort Madison police officer Jamie Carle stays with the vehicle, which couldn't be shut off, Saturday night at about 11:15 p.m., while officers scoured the neighborhood after the driver took off on foot.

FM teacher picked as Iowa NEA director

FORT MADISON - A lifelong Fort Madison student, teacher, and advocate has been elected to directorship with the National Education Association.

At a delegate assembly this weekend at Prairie Meadows in Altoona, Rachella Dravis, a 28-year veteran of the Fort Madison Community School District, was elected to one of two Iowa directors' posts on the national board that advocates for public education in the United States.

Dravis is the first teacher from Fort Madison to be elected to the post.

DRAVIS

Dravis has been active in advocacy for area students in several different elected positions with the Fort Madison Education Association and the Iowa State Education Association as an executive director representative. She said she has been thinking of seeking the national post for many years.

"I started this process about five years ago. I was nominated a couple of years ago but the circumstances in my life didn't allow it. My husband died and then my brother died and that was more important," she said.

"This past year I had friends talk to me and asked if I was ready to do this yet. I'll call them all my sisters, and we talked about activism, advocacy, and the passion I have for our students and this profession, and I told them I think I'm ready to go out there and see if I can get elected to this position."

Campaigning for the position is done within the educational community with delegates to the assembly based on membership. With Fort Madison being in a rural district, association members don't tally as high as the urban and larger communities in the state, which puts rural nominees at a disadvantage, but one that Dravis hit head on.

She made her presentation to the assembly on Saturday as part of the second election process. There were two directors' positions being filled by election this weekend and Dravis was elected on Saturday after about an hour of voting. Cedar Rapids kindergarten teacher and 20-year teacher Kelly McMahan was elected to the other director's post. The two will be filling positions currently held by Mike Beranek of West Des Moines and Joshua Brown of Des Moines.

Bucket calf arrives at Empty Nest

EMPTY NEST

By Curt Swarm

Ginnie is becoming a farm girl! It was Easter Sunday (also April Fools Day). We walked into church and the first thing Ginnie and I heard from the door greeters was, "We have a calf for you!" (No, this was not an April Fools joke.)

Oh, boy! My day could not have been made any happier, and it was already happy because of Easter.

The church was packed to overflowing. I had a hard time paying attention to the sermon because my mind was making preparations for the baby calf. What a gift of life on a special day!

At coffee hour, we met with the people who had the calf, farmer friends of ours. The calf was born the day before under a blue moon (the last blue moon until 2020). The mama cow had a bad leg and would have to be put down. A home was needed for the little black Angus heifer. We were glad to oblige.

We had a shelter and pen all ready. All we had to do was buy a nipple bucket and milk replacer from the farm supply store on our

FMHS girls win first tennis meet

BY CHUCK VANDENBERG
PCC EDITOR

FORT MADISON - In frigid temperatures, the Fort Madison girls tennis team sneaked in a meet with Keokuk Saturday morning.

What was originally scheduled to be an Invitational, turned out to just be the two teams due to the frigid temperatures. But the Hounds warmed up on the bottom half of the seedings to get the win.

Senior Katie Larson dropped her match at No. 1, to Jakala Hall 7-9. Larson has struggled against Hall for the past two years.

"Katie had a good match against long-time foe Jakala Hall and almost had her but ended up falling 7-9," head coach Amy Doherty said.

Japanese transfer student Miho Shirai got her first dose of American high school tennis, falling 4-8 in No. 2 singles to a Chilean transfer student in Keokuk's Daniela Lozano. Larson and Shirai also teamed up against Hall and Lozano and fell 6-8 for the Hounds' only losses on the day.

At No. 3, Kearnstyn Johnson knocked off the Chiefs' Maddi Miller 8-1 in short order. Larissa Ferrill dropped freshman Keleigh Hall 9-7, while Lanie Kuntz and Zoe Ramatowski at 5 and 6 both breezed to wins, 8-1, and 8-0 respectively.

Johnson and Ferrill earned a hard-fought 9-7 win in doubles over Miller and Keleigh Hall, while Kuntz and Ramatowski didn't give up a game in their 8-0 doubles win over the Chiefs' Kara Kavanaugh and Susannah Olsen.

"It was freezing, but good for the girls to finally get the chance to see how they will perform against opponents," Doherty said.

"Keokuk's numbers 5 and 6 were brand new, so Lanie and Zoe didn't have much trouble. Larissa faced a little adversity and fell behind after starting with a lead. She at one point was down 6-7 but finally calmed down enough and pulled out the win."

Doherty said Miho had a good match at number two against Keokuk's exchange student and with a little more experience in competitive play, she'll be tough to beat.

She also said the doubles teams are going to be difficult to beat after a bit more court time.

Bottle calf brings challenges to the farm

way to pick up the baby calf. How exciting!

Wouldn't you know it. The farm supply store was closed for Easter. No problem. The farmer would keep the calf one more day, giving it more time to nurse and receive colostrum from its mother.

We took a peek at the calf. She was a beauty. What would we name her? Ginnie and I racked our brains. "Baby Calf"--no, too descriptive. "Ebony"--maybe. "Blossom"--that's it! She will be our Easter Blossom! (Everyone says, "Don't name it, or you won't want to butcher it when the time comes." Oops.)

Blossom needed a little encouragement at her first feeding from the nipple bucket. I backed her into a corner and straddled Blossom while Ginnie held the bucket. I pried Blossom's mouth open with my fingers and Ginnie stuck the nipple in. It worked! Blossom was nursing before you could say, "Gee whillikers!" After a belly full of warm milk, Blossom danced around the pen and kicked up her heels. How cute! At the second feeding, she was up and waiting.

It seemed to be taking an awful long time for Blossom to suck down the two quarts of milk replacer. We solved the problem by reaming out the hole in the nipple. She now gulps milk down in nothing flat and nose bumps us for more, thinking we're her mother. Eee gads!

Blossom goes nuts when all the milk is gone and cries for more. I can't stand a hungry baby. However, there are all kinds of warnings about over-feeding a new calf. It was recommended that we get some high-grass content hay, and also put out a little dry calf starter, along with a bucket of water. Ok, so where do we get hay? We cannot possibly handle those huge round bales you see nowadays, and those smaller square bales are getting pretty tough to find. I put out an urgent request on social media. Presto, I had a name and phone number almost immediately. By noon that day, Blossom was sampling her sweet Iowa grass hay.

Say what you want about social media, but the response from it can be amazing.

Ginnie and I immediately called our kids and grandkids to come and watch Grandma and Grandpa bucket feed Blossom. They stampeded out and displayed mixed emotions, from, "let me hold that bucket, Papa Swarm," to trepidation. We're building memories we hope will last a lifetime.

Ginnie and I couldn't be happier. We're living the dream!

Dravis taking rural school advocacy to Washington D.C.

Dravis' position is actually a one-year position as one of the current directors will be leaving the position with a year left on his term, so she will be filling in that role, but she said she's already been nominated to be elected to the directorship again at next year's assembly. Full terms are three-year terms.

She said she has the full support of the FMCSA administration.

"Obviously, this is a pretty big commitment, so I will have to prioritize the other commitments to the local FMEA and the state, but this will allow me to advocate on a much bigger, national platform."

She said the position would require her to be in Washington D.C. four times a year and attend different meetings throughout the year.

"I'd say I'd be out of the classroom 16-20 days per year, but before I even put my name out there, I spoke with the Superintendent (Erin Slater) and shared with her what this was about and what it would entail. I have her support and the support of the principal (Todd Dirth) and we've all talked about different things we can do to get somebody consistent in the classroom so the students don't see a lag at any level."

Dravis said she has several issues she'd like to go to work on as a director, but she said one of the first focuses is going to be developing a strategy to get with some of the Iowa federal Republican legislators like Sens. Charles Grassley and Joni Ernst, and Reps. Steve King and Rod Blum. The other Iowa U.S. Rep., Dave Loebsack (D-2nd District), is a different story.

"When I go to D.C. I'm going to lobbying for education," she said. "I already know I've got a huge challenge as it's very hard to get appointments with them. They just don't want to talk to us. Loebsack is always very willing to work with us, but how can we get our voices to all five of those Congressional representatives. That's going to be a huge challenge."

She said she's happy that the assembly elected someone from a rural area and she wants to use that influence to help redirect some attention to rural Iowa districts.

"I've really been an advocate for kids and I see those kids are struggling," she said. "I don't think we have a rural voice. After you saw the results of last week's election, of the 13 locals that had bond issues, Lee County had the only two that didn't pass. That's one more example how rural, not just Iowa, other states, too, but how rural kids aren't getting the same time type of opportunities other kids across the state get. We tried to get that out at the local level and we didn't do a good enough job making them understand that. My voice now may carry a little further, may be heard a little louder."

Dravis said she also wants to talk about national issues such as the Deferred Action for Child Arrivals. The purpose of DACA is to protect eligible immigrant youth, who came to the United States when they were children, from deportation. DACA gives young undocumented immigrants: 1) protection from deportation, and 2) a work permit. The program expires after two years, subject to renewal. She said Iowa has 30,000 "dreamers" who are hoping to avoid deportation with the student or work permits.

"I want to talk to them about funding IDEA (Individuals with Disabilities Education Act) which is what funds our most vulnerable students. This is all (President Donald) Trump and (Secretary of Education Betsy) DeVos, they want to cut the public funding of education."

Dravis has been in the FMCSA since kindergarten and went to school at Richardson, Jefferson, the old high school, which was the old middle school, and graduated here. After college, she returned to the district as an associate for eight years, before landing a fourth-grade teaching spot at Lincoln Elementary 20 years ago and is now teaching at Fort Madison Middle School.

Aside from all the issues and learning that will go into the new post, Dravis said she will never lose her one main focus.

"I have a lot of work in front of me, but anything that affects our students will be on my agenda."
