Councilman wants review of Civil Service board

BY CHUCK VANDENBERG
PCC EDITOR

FORT MADISON - A Fort Madison City Councilman, who's supportive of term-limits, wants a review of the Civil Service Commission terms and scope.

First ward City Councilman Chris Greenwald balked at approving a renewal of Duane Denning to a 6-year appointment to the commission. The agenda item was part of the consent agenda, which includes groups of regular items including paying bills, approving previous minutes, etc, that typically don't require a debate at the meetings.

"I know Mr. Denning was on here when I started at least 10 years ago," Greenwald said. "Whereas I do appreciate that service, I recently have come to concerns with it. The last year and a half to two years have been tough. And I think it would have been easier if we had a spirit of cooperation between us and the civil service board. But I don't feel we had that."

Councilman Rusty Andrews asked Greenwald what issue he was specifically referring to.

Greenwald said he was speaking specifically to an issue where the board had voted to be in support of an item and then was lobbied by the members of the Fort Madison Police Department and had a special meeting

FCC chair trying to throttle Internet

You've all heard, at one point or another, the phrase net neutrality. Some probably are bored by the phrase and others don't get it, and other's just don't care.

But now is the time to care. In the last 10 weeks the Federal Communications Commission opened a door to allowing major communication companies to have control over what you get when log onto the Internet.

C. VANDENBERG

The Trump Administration and proponents of putting net neutrality on different legal footing - words used by attorneys for Verizon on an edition of HBO's "Last Week Tonight with John Oliver", are trying to put a "governor" or throttle on what comes to you on your devices when you access the Internet. The end games seems to be for them to be able to market their products more effectively than smaller company, eliminating a level playing field in a very competitive market

Most company's are looking at as anti-competitive, which it is. But I don't care too much about that. After all my company is totally dependent on our readers being able to access www.pencitycurrent.com, just as easily as they can www.thehawkeye.com or www.dailydem.com

Could those groups pay to have access to our site slowed down? Theoretically yes. Not very probable, but if their parent company's have the gumption and connections, it could happen. And they could do it to each other as well. On a larger scale, a company like Verizon could limit a competing company's app from getting access through its customers Verizon devices. U.S. Cellular could do the same thing. You would literally be seeing what they chose for you to see first. A former Verizon attorney, Ajit Pai, the chairman of the FCC is leading the charge at the direction of President Trump.

Holding current Internet rules keeps playing field level

How scary is that. The anti-competitive nature in itself is scary enough, but what it really is...and the really creepy part... is a tug at that one string that begins to unravel the fabric on which this country was woven - The First Amendment. If a company slows your message in favor of their own, they have curtailed your ability to get your message across the Internet and that's an infringement on free speech.

Pai says the tougher classification has impeded corporate investment in upgrades including broadband networks. I say that just means their holding progress hostage until they get their way.

Let's see if we can make this a little simpler to understand.

We have a huge river that runs right down the side of our town. It runs right by us and we have natural rights to use that river within legal parameters anyway we choose. We can fish it, we can boat on it, we can clean it and improve it...we can even contain it. But now a big corporation comes in and requires more of the river so they settle up north and put in dams and channels and move the river off our shores and leave us with tributary.

These net neutrality rules would work like that. Company's would determine what information would flow to your devices. They'll tell you they're just putting the rules on "different legal footing" and no major changes will occur.

For example, prior to the FCC incorporating stronger net neutrality guidelines during the Obama presidency company's such as AT&T, Verizon and Sprint were all caught violating net neutrality guidelines, but they were just that - guidelines. Verizon sued in court and the courts said FCC needed to tighten up the rules, which they did.

According to a website run by FreePress Action Fund www.freepress.net/blog/2017/04/25/net-neutrality-violations-brief-history - "From 2011-2013, AT&T, Sprint and Verizon blocked Google Wallet, a mobile-payment system that competed with a similar service called Isis, which all three companies had a stake in developing."

Also according to FreePress - "In 2005, the nation's largest (Internet Service Provider) ISP, Comcast, began secretly blocking peer-to-peer technologies that its customers were using over its network. Users of services like BitTorrent and Gnutella were unable to connect to these services. 2007 investigations from the Associated Press, the Electronic Frontier Foundation and others confirmed that Comcast was indeed blocking or slowing file-sharing applications without disclosing this fact to its customers."

We sent letters supporting net neutrality to the offices of U.S. Sen. Charles Grassley and U.S. Rep. Dave Loebsack.

"As a member of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, which has jurisdiction over telecommunications policy, I will continue to closely monitor any FCC rulemaking related to net neutrality, and will keep your thoughts in mind when considering any legislation related to this important issue. My primary goal is to ensure that constituents in my district have continued open access to internet content while also fostering an environment that allows our rural service providers the ability to compete and grow in an ever changing telecommunications landscape," Loebsack wrote in his reply.

By clicking on the following link http://act.freepress.net/sign/inter-net_nn_trump/?source=-conf&aktmid=tm595487.QQ9XGl&t=2 - you can register your comments with the FCC about keeping Internet access fully open.

Seriously, anything else is giving these company's a knob to control the speed of information to your phone, computer or tablet. They will tell you what you get and when you get it. This is no small change. It can be compared to an invasion of privacy by limiting where you shop, how you book a flight or hotel and, yeah, what news outlets you read.

Councilman wants board term limits

and reversed that position.

Greenwald said it was a decision to spend money to use a consultant to find a new police chief.

Mayor Brad Randolph said the commission was in favor of hiring a consultant and then reversed their position and recommended using in-house resources.

"I think if you search your memory, you will find you were lobbied," Greenwald told Andrews.

"Actually then, they also lobbied Council members on that and I guess I don't think that's the function of the Civil Service board and at that time they really gave me the impression of being anti-city. Whereas I think their function is to be neutral and serve as a bridge between the city and public safety."

Greenwald said he was not in favor of renewing Denning's appointment.

Randolph asked if the boards are dictated by higher governance. Varley said the city code and section 400 of the Iowa Code dictates the function of the Civil Service Commission.

Randolph asked Varley to look into something that would outline the roles and expectations of volunteers who sit on recommending boards and commissions.

"I think that's a good idea and we can do something like that for those boards," Varley said.

Title 2, Chapter 11, Paragraph 2 of the Fort Madison City Code indicates Fort Madison Civil Service Commission terms are six years. Section 400 of the Iowa Code shows the terms are for four years.

Greenwald said he's in favor of term limits and wasn't going to run for his current City Council term.

"I was talked into this last term and I'm a term limits person. The Civil Service board is one of those, that when it is needed it's serious...it's big stuff," Greenwald said. "It's almost like they're supreme court justices and they end up being on there for life. We should turn it over every once in a while. We should strive to do that. You know, 10 years is too long. I'm a term limits guy because you get too comfortable. You become overbearing and I think that's perhaps what's happened to this board. I'm very uncomfortable that they were led by the police department."

Councilman Chad Cangas asked if it was specifically Mr. Denning or the commission in general that Greenwald had a problem with.

"I think it's the commission in general, but Denning was highly involved in that decision, Greenwald said. This side of my brain says God bless the guy for all the time he's put in, and part of my brain says I don't appreciate it because we need to try and keep it fresher. This is painful."

The council moved to table the issue and remove the appointment from the consent agenda, which Greenwald opposed, but it passed 4-1. Councilmen Kevin Rink and Travis Seidel were absent from the meeting.

In other action, the council:

- approved 5-0 to authorize a loan agreement in an amount not to exceed $2.7 million for the Blackhawk sewer construction.
- approved, 5-0, an agreement with the Iowa Dept. of Transportation to use TAP Funds for the Rodeo Park Trail Rehabilitation.
- approved 5-0 to purchase property at 1801-1805 Avenue L for $18,000. Varley said the property will be needed when the Hwy 61 reconstruction gets underway.
