Proposal could hurt county's bridges, roads

Senate proposal would allow forestry haulers to exceed county's limits by 50,000 lbs.

BY CHUCK VANDENBERG
PCC EDITOR

LEE COUNTY – Lee County Engineer Ben Hull is concerned a proposed bill in front of Iowa legislators could damage county bridges and roadways.

Senate File 184 was passed out of a senate subcommittee on Feb. 21 and Hull brought the issue to the attention of the Lee County Board of Supervisors on Tuesday.

A resolution is on the agenda for the upcoming Tuesday meeting that would outline the county's opposition to the new bill.

In summary, the bill would allow vehicles hauling raw forest products to exceed maximum gross weight limits on state roads up to a maximum total weight of 130,000 pounds.

"A vehicle or combination of vehicles for which a permit is issued under the bill may exceed the maximum gross weight limitations set forth under Code Section 321.463, if the combined gross weight or gross weight of the vehicle or combination of vehicles does not exceed 130,000 pounds," according to the bill.

The bill also has axle limitations and prohibits haulers exceeding weight limitations from using the interstate highways in the state. The bill's language spells out that haulers can use Iowa's primary roads on direct routes from the field to processing facilities.

County advocacy groups such as the Iowa State Associations of Counties and the Iowa Association of County Supervisors, in addition to BNSF and Union Pacific, are opposed to the current legislation.

Hull told supervisors that county engineers are actively lobbying against the bills.

"They've been putting out updates and last week they kind of sounded the alarm on this," Hull said.

Devil minks leave Empty Nest...empty

Mayhem struck the Empty Nest Farm. I was a little late doing the morning chores. It wasn't until 11:00 or so before I got out to feed Blossom and take care of the hens.

Before I pulled open the door to the hen house, I thought I heard some strange clucking. Sure enough, I was confronted with the awful sight of a mass of feathers, a pile of dead hens in the corner, and a beady-eyed, fat mink staring at me. It tried to hide behind the laying box. I grabbed the only weapon I could find, which was a leg hook. The handle would do for a club. I moved the laying box and the mink scampered out, ran over top of the feeder, and was out through the open door, lickety-split.

Out of a dozen hens, eight were dead, all lined up real neat, execution style. A sick feeling hit me in the gut—the knowledge that I hadn't provided my girls with the protection they needed. Those hens were all pets, they let me pick them up and didn't even peck my hand when I reached under them for eggs. Dang that mink! They are vicious killers, sucking the blood out of victims' necks. I text Ginnie and she cried.

There was only one thing to do. I grabbed the live-animal trap from the barn, baited it with a dead hen, and left it in the hen house. The other four hens were clucking nervously, high up on their roost. Poor things. What a reign of terror! I had trapped two minks previous to this latest incident. I was hoping I'd gotten rid of them all; evidently I didn't. There hadn't been any problem for quite a while. I should have known better. There must be a family of minks close by—probably by the creek across the road. When I was growing up and we had chickens, there was never a problem like this. Minks weren't even around.

In the afternoon, I checked the hen house—still no mink, and still four live hens. They seemed reluctant to go in the hen house, but it was so cold and windy, I had to shut them in. I would see what the morning brought. Hopefully the trap would do its job.

At 4:00 in the morning, in the middle of my reading/writing routine, it came to me that the reason the batt insulation along the walls of the hen house was shredded was not because of the wind or from the hens pecking at it, it was because of the mink trying to climb the walls to get to the roosting hens! I threw on some clothes and headed out to the hen house. Too late. The other four hens were dead.

Pesky predator gets all 12 Empty Nest birds

I told Ginnie and she burst out crying. She loved seeing the hens wander around the house in the summer, scratching for bugs and seeds, not to mention those beautiful brown eggs they laid. We gave eggs away as gifts of love.

I removed the dead hens but left the baited trap in the hen house. Maybe I could catch that devil yet.

The next morning—nothing. But I left the baited trap where it was.

The following morning, the trap was turned over, but no mink. The dead hen I had left in the trap for bait was stuck under the trip-latch. I fixed that, and reset the trap.

It snowed that day and night. The next morning, there were fresh mink tracks all around the hen house. I opened the door and saw it, that devil mink staring back at me from the confines of the trap, like the night-thief it was.

Mr. or Ms. Mink got a 15-mile ride to a rural county wildlife area, where I turned it loose, hoping to never see it again. Now that I caught the main offender, Ginnie and I may consider some new baby chicks this spring. I'll walk that creek bed first, looking for a mink den, and shore up the floor of the hen house. Who knew the life of a chicken could be so perilous? But we are thankful for the two years that they were in our lives. Ginnie says that she wants to have a little memorial service when we eat the last of our farm fresh brown eggs.

Have a good story. Call or text Curt Swarm in Mt. Pleasant at 319-217-0526, email him at curtswarm@yahoo.com or visit his website at www.empty-nest-words-photos-and-frames.com.

Turning Hope into Reality

County engineers lobbying against hauling proposal

BILL - Continued from Page 1

“This bill would allow a permit to be issued specific to logging and forestry industry that would allow products to be transported on loads up to 130,000 lbs which would be extremely detrimental to our road systems.”

Lee County bridges are rated at 80,000 lbs.

Hull said Lee County bridges aren't designed for that kind of weight load.

“Particularly the older bridges, they certainly weren't designed for 130,000 pounds. Each bridge is different but there are many things that factor into what a bridge can hold up in terms of a load, including the age and condition, but also the design,” he said.

Hull said the state would also be setting a scary precedent with other industries who are watching how the bill progresses through the legislature.

“You can bet the other industries are watching and, if this bill gets through, it could open the floodgates,” Hull said.

“Absolutely,” said board chair Gary Folluo.

Hull said Lee County currently has 138 bridges and he said the majority of those are over 30 years old.

“Many of them are much older than that,” Hull said.

“I think, without a doubt, this would translate into gradual and sudden failure of the bridges.”

He also reminded the board that school buses are using those bridges as well, in addition to the county being legally liable for any accidents on county roads that could occur as a result of the heavier weight loads.

In other action at Tuesday's meeting, supervisors:

will hold a public hearing on the 2019-20 fiscal year budget.

will hold a third and final reading on a proposed ATV/UTV ordinance that will allow legal riding on secondary gravel roads from 4 a.m. to 10 p.m. daily.

will consider a resolution setting a $25 annual permit for ATVs/UTVs operated in the county.
