Educators In Peru

Last November, Alice Keeler, an International Google Certified Innovator, and Crystal Wilson, a Spanish teacher at UHS, traveled to Lima, Peru.

As a Google Innovator, Alice has written many books about educational technology; she currently has an EdTech blog, and she has made many lifelong friends through the Google Educational Group.

Alice was asked to do a presentation at a High School in Lima on how to incorporate different teaching strategies using technology during the Covid-19 pandemic. Crystal said she was invited by Alice, "to share ideas on what I do in my classroom, and how we handled the pandemic and teaching."

Alice and Crystal visited a private Catholic High School. Crystal said the school was doing hybrid learning, both at home and in school teaching. She also mentioned some of their classrooms were moved outside in tarps with desks and whiteboards, and the rest were indoors.

"They are doing a lot with technology in Peru," Crystal said. "It was eye-opening to see Alice's presentations, and to see the things Peru is doing in their classrooms." She said the educators there were amazing. "I got to collaborate and bring back ideas to use in my classroom." Crystal said the students in Lima study English, while the students in Ulysses study Spanish. A future goal for Crystal would be connecting these schools together, either with video conferences, or as "pen-pals."

Crystal said, "They are dealing with the same issues on the other side of the world as we are going through here." Crystal explained the similarities and struggles with remote learning, student quarantines, and teacher exhaustion. "It was eye opening to see that we are not the only ones going through these struggles during pandemic."

"The people of Peru are so wonderful and helpful," Alice said. All of Alice's presentations and keynotes were done in Spanish. "Even though my Spanish is at best mediocre, no one ever complains, and they really appreciate the effort." Alice said. "Usually, I am working with teachers from private schools, but at a conference there can be teachers from any school, public or private."

"I felt the paperwork to get there was the most challenging part," Crystal said. Due to the pandemic, proof of vaccination and a negative Covid test was required. "I had to have a negative covid test two days before going, and two days before coming back," Crystal said. Both Alice and Crystal mentioned mask mandates in Peru, which require an individual to wear two face masks. Crystal said, "after so many days you get used to the mask." In Peru, about 85% of the country is vaccinated.

A lot of food was eaten on the trip as well! Shayla Jaquez went on the trip with Alice and Crystal, and the three of them went on various adventures, such as visiting a farmers market, going on tours, the beach, etc.

"It was so great to have Crystal go on this trip, and I know it was fantastic for the students," Alice said. "She is a wonderful full asset, and not just because of her ability to speak Spanish. She is incredibly fun and a natural at connecting with people." Alice believes a world language teacher benefits the classroom by bringing back new cultural experiences for students. "Students kept coming up to me to tell me things Mrs. Wilson had told them about her trip, and they were truly amazed."
