Chelan County Commissioners destroy marijuana farmers with strict new regulations, growers vow to fight back with lawsuit

BY IAN DUNN AND GARY BÉGIN

After hearing much public testimony, Chelan County Commissioners passed new regulations regarding the growing and processing of marijuana at the Aug. 22 Chelan County Commissioner's meeting. After the vote was tallied, some of the 30 or so audience members cried "jackass!" and "shame!" to no avail.

The winners in this skirmish were the handful of complaining homeowners who live near marijuana growers including newly elected Commissioner Kevin Overbay, who has a marijuana grower for a neighbor in Malaga. Despite that fact, he did not recuse himself from voting against the growers who are concerned the new regulations will put nearly all of them out of business.

"It's crazy. We've been in business since 2013. We followed all the rules and regulations. We built accordingly and got permitted. Now, we're just done. We have 20 full time employees that no longer have jobs," said Josh Bitterman of Evergreen Production in Monitor. "They zoned us out. We got the building. We went into the zoning they told us we could build in. Now, we're zoned out."

Prior to passing the new regulations each commissioner related their rationale for imposing the new rules on marijuana. Commission Chair Doug England said he would have liked to keep the ban in place prohibiting new marijuana growing operations.

"Even though I'm not a proponent of the use of marijuana, that has not been our intent or our purpose. This regulation in no way affects the retail sale of marijuana in Chelan County. I would like to have left it just as it is, however, that is not an option," England said. "I will take only partial blame for that. The three commissioners, none of us has ever been involved in the production of marijuana. We were assured by the industry that odor would not be a problem. In fact, a comment was made they would not even know we were there."

Not every existing grow in Chelan County is going to fit these new regulations, England said.

"It would be nice to simply say we are going to ban jerks in Chelan County and anybody that is nice and respectful of neighbors can continue," England said. "That's not the way code can be written. That's not the way code can be enforced. It's also definitely a concern, but not an overriding consideration that production could be more expensive than it has been in the past, but that is a fact of business."

When this process began, the commission made no assurances, said Commissioner

Keith Goehner. Chelan County did not have regulations nor had permitted any cannabis activities before. The regulations do set parameters for what is acceptable for growing marijuana in Chelan County, not an easy task to come up with regulations. There were people on both sides of the issue expressing their concerns, both for the industry and against it.

"As our resolution states, they are finding some of the same issues," Goehner said. "Dealing with Chelan County is somewhat unique because of the topography. We've made the commitment to try and do our best to come up with these regulations had to be put into place in order to conduct the businesses and make sure the quality of life in Chelan County is maintained. The whole purpose of I-502 was to decriminalize the possession he said.

"Code is put in place, but it is also amendable. As time lapses, we should be revisiting it to see if it is working," Goner said. He said it was it really covers a lot of the areas that was uncertainties for us as counties, not just Chelan County, but counties statewide. When we talk with our fellow commissioners, Overbay stated, "It's very unfortunate. It's unfortunate we had to get to a place where

After much hemming and hawing, council approves new Sheriff contract

BY IAN DUNN EDITOR

The Leavenworth City Council has approved a new four year contract for law enforcement services with the Chelan County Sheriff's Office, albeit begrudgingly. After much discussion, the council approved the contract at the Aug. 22 meeting.

The contract covers basic law enforcement services.

The cost for 2018 is $531,552. In 2019, the cost is $551,220. In 2020, the cost is $571,614. In 2021, the cost is $592,764.

"The intent is to provide 24 hour/7 day a week coverage for the city. The contract provides for a police liaison that will spend 80 percent of their on-duty time addressing city issues within the municipal boundaries," said City Administrator Joel Walinski. "The other piece is the Sheriff's Office provides all the necessary equipment. One thing it does not provide. The city pays for RiverCom services. That would be a separate cost. There's also some language in here to provide 200 hours of overtime for events created or advertised by the city. We've had lots of conversations about this contract."

More than any other council person, Elmer Larsen has had the most difficulty with the contract. Not surprising considering his long tenure with the city council. He said he struggles with this every time.

"It seems 1.4 square miles should cost proportionally the same as Stevens and Blewett, Lake Chelan. Seems to be on the high end. I would like to see something that took the population into consideration and the service area," Larsen said. "It could be applied across the county as demographics change. Our numbers go up with population, our dollars go up. We actually lost numbers in the last census. That's not reflected in the contract. The contract goes up."

Larsen said he wants it to be predictable and equitable to what the folks in the unincorporated areas are paying.

"Right now, there is no way to verify that. I don't like all the numbers thrown out by deputies. Our needs for search and rescue and marine patrol are minimal compared to Lake Chelan," Larsen said. "It seems like somehow this should be set down, looked at and worked out. It should be looked at from a county wide perspective instead of by city. If the county doesn't want to look at it then I would encourage the cities to start looking at it."

Councilwoman Sharon Waters said this was the first time she's been involved with this and definitely had some concerns. She felt like the people in the city were double dipping, paying more than people who live in the county.

Whenever someone calls RiverCom to the city, it costs the city $42.50, Waters pointed out. She also wants the liaison officer to make a list of what he or she is doing in the city.

"I think cost are escalating. There are things Leavenworth isn't even affected by, but we're paying for it. That needs to be looked at," Waters said. "Because we have a big tourist industry and a lot of lodging tax, that doesn't mean we're rich. Kind of feels like we're have. I don't know if any or all of that has been achieved."

Marajuana Laws: Growers plan to pursue lawsuit in response

... it's never been my intent to agree to something that would diminish an industry. It would be easy for this commission to adopt nothing, but that is nothing any of the three of us wanted to do. We wanted to see an industry be able to be here in Chelan County. Unfortunately, finding middle ground. You have very little space," Overbay said.

"My hope is, as we work through this ... rules and regulations can change," Overbay concluded.

Bitterman said they have over $1 million invested into their business. At this point, a lawsuit is their only option.

"What else can we do?"

Nick Paton

There's no way to get your money back. It's not good for any of us. There's not going to be any grows left," Bitterman said.

Nick Paton is the head grower for Double Delicious in Malaga. He felt like the commission decided to listen to the small group of residential complainers.

"We're in an agricultural community. We may not be considered agriculture, but we are regulated by the U.S. Department of Agriculture. I have to have a pesticide license to use any type of chemicals at the facility," Paton said. "If they were to regulate this business the same way they do a microbrewery, what are they going to do because they smell? Neighbors don't like them, but they are still going to allow revenue on the retail side. They are still going to allow the stores."

Not a single business would be able to continue to operate under the new regulations, Paton said. He calls it spot zoning, which would put the existing 44 operations out of business. The Central Washington Grower's Association is planning to get back what's been lost, Paton said.

I-502 passed in 2012, including carrying a majority in Chelan County, Paton pointed out.

"The county commissioners said they would allow businesses to operate. They said they would add no extra hindrances or extra regulation. They would simply follow state law. These businesses came in and dumped fortunes, took outside investments," Paton said. "This is under a 20-year plan or longer to recoup some of these investments. A few years later, they completely flip flopped. They banned until they could figure out extensive regulation, which is what they just put forth. They will no longer allow any new businesses to come in or expansion of businesses."

Paton said the commissioners make it sound like all you have to do is follow the regulations, but it's not that simple.

"Maybe they are in the wrong zoning or they are too close to their neighbors. Maybe their building doesn't have a 35-foot setback. Our building was built in 1907 right next to the train tracks. We can't just pick up and move to meet their criteria," Paton said. "You go through the list of each producer/processors and why they would fail. There is not a single one that meets the criteria. There might be handful who would have to do extensive renovations that most can't afford."

Caitlein Ryan of Seven Hills Farm, president of the Central Washington Grower's Association, said she was not surprised at the commission's decision. She said this is what they wanted from the outset.

"A few made comments about it not being okay to let the ban lapse. Essentially they've just written code that has the exact same affect in the end," Ryan said. "My feeling is they get to pat themselves on the back, but this has just brought us to the exact same end. All of us have put in quite a lot of work. We've been here hours and hours on end for the last two years, right along side of them, giving them lots of information to come up with a real sensible code. It all fell on deaf ears, for the most part."

A lot of other counties have grandfathered this in, she said, Snohomish, Grant, Douglas, Okanogan, counties that look very similar to Chelan County. Those counties are in a similar position, but have not decided to take similar action, Ryan noted.

Moving forward, Ryan said they have a lawsuit on the books that they have been holding off on until this new code was created. During that "holding off period" were months of meetings between the opposing sides meant to mediate the issues, but the growers feel like they got the short end of the stick.

"This code is written with lots of crazy exceptions. It will make our life easy once we get to court. That is where we are headed," Ryan said.

Lee Duncan, owner of Man-na Productions, a tier one indoor grow in Malaga and vice president of the CWGA, said the new regulations amount to a little more than spot zoning, and more or less, a ban. Out of the 44 farms in Chelan County, only one, he figures, can meet the regulations.

One farm does not amount to an industry, Duncan said.

"I meet the zoning, but I don't meet the setback on one side. I am probably one of two farms that could get a variance. I just feel like they'll pull the rug out from under us some other way. 'Suzie' said you smell, so you're done," Duncan said. "I'll stay in the lawsuit as long as I can. We're going to move forward with it asap. It has affected me greatly over the past year-and-a-half because we do the legwork for all this."

Duncan said they've come to 90 percent of the meetings. He feels like Overbay is trying to root the industry out of the county.

"Not even the two people that spoke against us at the last meeting like the resolution. No one has said shut all the farms down, but that's exactly what they've done," Duncan said. "A dereliction of duty by all three commissioners. They are going to use taxpayer dollars to fight a fight that easily could have been resolved through cooperation, but they never allowed it. They strategically divided this community."

The hope, Duncan says, is to be able to continue operating while the lawsuit is taking place.

Council accepts terms of wastewater loan and grant

BY IAN DUNN
EDITOR

The Leavenworth City Council is another step closer to securing the funding for improvements to the wastewater treatment plant and the city sewer collection system from the USDA Rural Development Loan and Grant Program.

"The last time we met, we talked about applying for a grant. We didn't think we'd hear for a few more weeks as it ran through the channels of these agencies that had to approve it. On Aug. 4, just two weeks after we submitted, the grantor called me and said I need you to sign these documents today because there's money on the table and if we don't sign it, we may not get it back," said Finance Director Chantell Steiner. "I signed that paperwork, which put it in place to give to us."

The city requested full funding for the project, $10.7 million in loans funds and $3.3 million in grant funds. At the Aug. 22 city council meeting, the council approved the Water and Wastewater Grant Agreement along with two resolutions related to the loan funding.

The funds are for improvements at the wastewater treatment plant to reduce the amount of phosphorus released into the Wenatchee River along with improvement to the sewage collection system in town, basically the pipes.

"The main piece is the south interceptor. Another good project for the collection system is on Ski Hill, where back in the '90s, they tried to do a good job separating the stormwater and sewer," City Administrator Joel Walinski said of the collection system. "It could be better. That is one project on the list, because what we do know, when we get the spring runoff or the fall rain, we do get a mix of wastewater and stormwater."

Longtime Councilman Elmer Larsen remembered that problem area at Ski Hill.

"They were combining sewer and stormwater so a lid was put in to try and separate but it gets overwhelmed with stormwater, so you're treating it all. DOE approved it at the time. It was a stopgap measure. It has been 20 years," Larsen said.

Those are the two big projects on the list, Walinski said. There are a number of other projects throughout town, which can be addressed during road construction. When there are pipes to be replaced, the money will be there, Walinski said. There are also dollars set for improvements at the public works facility.

Walinski explained to the council getting the loan and grant is like buying a house.

"You are walking through the mortgage procedure. You have sign more and more documents. That is the process we're going through right now. We are getting closer and closer. A lot of these documents are for providing $3.2 million in grants. This is how we want to spend it and this is how you have to report it," Walinski said. "The loan, is the city able to cover the debt service of that? Is the city willing to commit to that? At this point in time, we are."

Steiner said the two resolutions lock in the maximum interest rate of 2 percent. The rate can go lower at closing, but this document states it will go no higher than 2 percent, she said.

"That is a critical step," Steiner said.

WRI after school

SUBMITTED BY JOSEPH WINTERS

As you walk near the river during the coming fall days, you may begin to notice the shimmer of salmon making their way upstream, completing the final stage of their hundreds-of-miles journey. Appropriately, the theme for the Wenatchee River Institute's fall 2017 after school programs is Watersheds, Salmon, and Kids; Oh My! Each day from 3-5 p.m., participating kids will find their inner sockeye, chinook, or silver through creative activities led by local artists or salmon experts. WRI's after school programs are unique in their small class size—capped at 15 students—ensuring a more meaningful, individualized experience for each student. Registration for session one has now opened—apply before the programs fill up! After school adventure is available as Art Academy or Nature Trek. Art Academy allows students to get their hands dirty with clay, paints, prints, and more while exploring nature-related themes. Art Academy is offered Tuesdays for 1st-3rd graders, and Wednesdays for 4th-6th graders. The Tuesday session is led by local artist Amber Zimmerman, who has a B.A. in Environmental Art from Evergreen State College and is passionate about teaching a variety of art forms to students of all ages. The Wednesday session is led by Bethany Wray, an artist who currently works as the lead teacher at Mountain Sprouts. Bethany has experience in several other nonprofit art education programs, and looks forward to sharing her artistic skills with her students. Nature Trek is all about interaction with the great outdoors through creative play and scientific exploration. Students will romp around the Institute's 9.6-acre campus with WRI staff and special guests from the Cascade Columbia Fisheries Enhancement Group, a nonprofit dedicated to facilitating sustainable fisheries enhancement projects for future generations. Nature Trek takes place Thursdays, and is offered to 1st-6th graders. All classes, Tuesday through Thursday from 3-5 p.m. meet in the E. Lorene Young house behind the E. Lorene Young Community Garden on 12th Street in Leavenworth. Transportation is available for students traveling from P-D and Osborn. To register for session one (weeks of Sept. 18, 25, Oct. 2, 9, and 16), and for more information, visit www.wenatcheeriverinstitute.org. Each five-week session is $90 for members and $113 for non-members.

Teacher Demonstration

Cascade School District teachers gathered outside the district offices recently show support and solidarity for the negotiations with the administration over a new contract. Word is a new contract agreement has been reached.

Sheriff contract: Larsen wants contract to be based on population and city size

The city can't sustain that for very long, said Councilwoman Carolyn Wilson.

"Our property tax and our public safety sales tax. We can't maintain paying that. It's a tough one for me. We can't afford it," Wilson said.

Councilwoman Margaret Neighbors said there needed to be some metric that provides response times. Dryden resident Lisa Goehner asked the council how the other cities pay for the contract.

Larsen responded that property tax is used to cover the contract with the fire department and the sheriff.

The property tax doesn't even cover the sheriff's contract now.

"We have to hire Pacific Security to have someone walking the sidewalks, so we have a presence," Larsen said. "We have to pay for RiverCom, the jail time, the prosecutor. This encourages us to pay for a school resource officer and pay for a deputy to come testify against somebody. It's all the other little costs that add up. We're probably paying $650,000 (per year)."

Goehner asks if the other cities had these costs too. Walinski said Cashmere is 1.5 times larger than Leavenworth, but pays less.

"Chelan pays more, but Manson doesn't. They are county. It's that inequity. Manson is populous very similar to Cashmere, but that is covered under the county. Chelan is back paying what they were with their own police department," Larsen said. "Seems like there needs to be formula between population and area. There should be a formula that works it out. We don't need to be debating whether Cashmere is paying as much as we are. I hoping we can sort that out in the next few years."

Mayor Cheri Kelley Farivar said this in no way reflects their opinion on the service the city gets from the Chelan County Sheriff's Office.

"We'll feel well served, well protected and particularly, we've enjoyed having the close association with Bruce Long. We're sorry to lose him, but that is part of his career trajectory. The issues here are cost related," Farivar said.

While the city has 24 hour coverage, Larsen said the deputy could respond from anywhere, like Cashmere or Lake Wenatchee. Chelan County Commissioner Keith Goehner said Leavenworth is getting the hours it is paying for.

"This individual may be employed by Chelan County, but the hours the city pays for are the ones that are documented and you see in the report," Goehner said. "To your point, where the deputies work outside the area, but also serve inside the city. The city gets the hours the contract provides for. How the individual gets to the city is Chelan County's issue, not necessarily the city of Leavenworth."

Chelan County Sheriff Brian Burnett said the contract provides for three FTEs.

"We came in and sat down and talked for 2017, it was three FTE's plus we'll give you another FTE, your liaison, Bruce Long. We don't charge for a fourth FTE, because we really thought that was a way for the service," Burnett said.

The city has decided not to further participate on funding a school resource officer for the Cascade School District, Burnett said.

"It's our commitment to continue that program. You'll still see Deputy Morrison. I really believe in that program and what the future holds for us, making sure we have a safe learning environment. I think it is important for the culture as we move forward, to have a relationship with the kids," Burnett said.

Burnett said the contract needs to be a win-win.

"My job is to be the balance between the commissioners office and the citizens we serve, but also give a level of service, not based on population, more towards calls for service," Burnett said. "We're not going to put each city in a box. I'm not going to get deeper than that. You can talk to me further. We need to move forward in the future and talk about it early on."

Neighbors said she hoped the Sheriff heard the frustration. She said the city really wanted to work with him to come up with a win-win solution, because what they are dealing with now is not sustainable.

Keith Goehner said he hears the concerns about sustainability. The same concerns are expressed at the commission table, regarding providing law enforcement for the citizens of Chelan County.

"When we talk about how we determine what these contracts will be, you do have consistency throughout the contract. The consistency may have different factors. When the formula is put together, how much will it cost? How much will we provide services? How much does the sheriff charge?," Keith Goehner said. "There are some factors across the board for all cities. The variables might be the number of patrolmen. Entiat has less than one. Cashmere has fewer than Leavenworth. I just want to assure you, from the county's standpoint, the desire is to have consistency throughout."

That's why the contracts are negotiated at the same time, Goehner said. There's not a lot of variation. The one thing that is a frustration on the county's point is the fact the numbers are always one year behind.

"I know it looks like you're getting an escalating contract, which it is, but it is based on numbers that have already transpired not numbers that will take place," Goehner said. "We are trying to give a middle road, to be fair to the cities, but we also recognize there are towns in the county which are not cities. You, as a city, have opportunities that those in the unincorporated portions of the county do not have."

"From the commission's standpoint, I do have responsibility for all the citizens incorporated and unincorporated. That is really the thrust we have as commissioners is to try and provide those services in an equitable manner."

The council unanimously approved the new Sheriff's contract.

Leavenworth Library held a party for the children who participated in its Summer Reading Program. L-Bow-the-clown greatly amused his young audience with his antics. This was followed by three raffle drawings and then crafts and cookies. The library had 232 children in the summer reading program....a big success.

Opinions

What about my rights?

IN MY OPINION
Bill Forhan
Publisher

I am offended. I'm deeply offended and I am tired of being demeaned and harassed as being an insensitive, hateful, bigoted, intolerant, sexist, homophobe all because I am a conservative and an independent thinker.

I think that it is far past time that anyone who wields such descriptions of intolerance be hauled into court and sued for defamation of character. After all, I deserve a safe space where I can't be abused as antisocial by progressive thinkers whose only way of diminishing my opinion is to belittle and demean me.

These people don't know me. They do not know what is in my heart. They don't try to understand my point of view. They simply dismiss my point of view because it threatens their narrow-minded sense of the world.

What am I offended about? I am offended because the Federal Government is destroying the future of our children and grandchildren by allowing the deficit to spin out of control year after year. It doesn't matter what the race, religion or sex of your progeny, eventually they will have to pay for the excesses of the current generation.

I am offended that 53 years after President Johnson launched his famous "War on Poverty" we have made no progress. We have a huge bureaucracy that administers numerous programs to help but according to Wikipedia those living in poverty has grown from 30 million in 1965 to 43 million in 2015.

I am offended that despite the Civil Rights movement, Affirmative Action and eight years of the first black President race relations in this country are worse than ever. I am especially offended that progressives blame this problem on white people despite the historic efforts most white people have made attempting to end racial intolerance.

I am offended by those who would desecrate our flag in the name of free speech. They might well have the right to do it but they disrespect the sacrifice of those who have given their lives to preserve that right.

I am offended by the politicians who feel they have the right to live like royalty exempting themselves from the laws they pass for the rest of us. Social Security and Obamacare would be vastly different if they had to rely on the benefits they legislate for the rest of us.

A great American once said, "Darkness cannot drive out darkness: only light can do that. Hate cannot drive out hate: only love can do that."

America is deeply divided today because the darkness of ignorance and intolerance is trying to drive out hate.

Safe spaces cannot build understanding or enlightenment.

Destroying the symbols and records of our history will only deepen the darkness by hiding the painful mistakes of the past.

Only the light of inspection and debate can help us to heal the wounds and build understanding.

Dr. Martin Luther King, the author of the above quote, would be deeply disappointed in the course of today's political wind.

I am also offended that we have lost our commitment to our founding principles. Principles like those found in our Declaration of Independence, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal..."

Today it would appear that we have not only forgotten that powerful message but we have allowed our elected representatives to create all kinds of groups whose rights and privileges are superior to the general populace. This only builds envy and ultimately divides us.

As Dr. Martin Luther King said, "...hate cannot drive out hate."

America is deeply divided today. If we hope to save it, we must all get out of our safe zones and re-examine the principles and the history that made us the envy of the world.

Some of that history is painful. We can either allow that painful history to tear us apart or we can use it to help us build a better future for all of our citizens. A future where all of us - men and women - have an equal opportunity for life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Neighbors

Nic was born in Leavenworth, Washington on Dec. 18, 1992 to Keith and Jody Tower where he joined his older brother Zach. Nic was a tough kid. He started swimming almost before he could walk. He really scared the lifeguards when he went off the diving board at 18 months. He was in the summer swim league in Leavenworth most of his early years and was on the UW Water Polo team in college.

Nic's love of life began with reading. He set the record at his grade school for number of books read, which only fell recently. He was a voracious reader and continued this for his entire short life.

He loved the outdoors and

wanted to be out in it. With family camping trips to Canada, scout trips across Washington, hiking, biking, skiing, scuba diving and sailing he continued his quest until his death.

Nic grew from a questioning child into a great young man. I watched him his whole life and he was a much nicer person than I could ever be. He loved to help people and was a trusted friend to many. As his friend Michael said, "He was the best of all of us, just a genuinely pure person."

After finishing high school in Leavenworth, he went to Western Washington University and then finished his Chemical Engineering degree at UW. He was working at the Bremerton Naval Shipyard as a shift engineer and recently obtained his credentials as a nuclear shift engineer. Although he liked the people he worked with, the job did not hold his interest so he was set to go to New Zealand in September. He planned to travel around and possibly settle down there. He was on a 10-day canoe/camping trip on Ross Lake with his dad, his brother and his good friend Danny, when he died tragically in an accident at the falls on Pierce Creek on Aug. 22, 2017.

He is survived by his parents in Leavenworth and his brother Zach and wife Rosie in Coles Corner. He is also survived by his grandmother Alice and many aunts, uncles and cousins and by his numerous friends. If you met him you were probably counted among one of his friends. Nic's motto was to live life to its fullest. He was on his way to living it that way.

A wake is scheduled for 2 p.m. on Sept. 2 at the family home to honor his life. Please bring a chair, some food (grill will be available) and drink, and a story to tell about Nic. All who were touched by this awesome young man are welcome to attend.

We would like to thank all of the campers at Big Beaver Campground, the Ross Lake Resort and the National Park Service for their help in retrieving Nic and helping to get him home to us. I would like to especially thank Danny. Without his help, I am not sure if I would have made it.

I lieu of flowers, please donate to your favorite outdoor or environmental organization. That would be the best way to honor Nic's life and love of the outdoors.

Nic, you truly were my favorite second son! And the smiling light of your mother's life.

City officials struggle with apple maggot quarantine

By IAN DUNN
EDITOR

In June, Leavenworth city officials were made aware the city was part of an Apple Maggot Quarantine Area. The Washington State Department of Agriculture restricts the removal of brush and solid waste from the quarantine area, which is the greater portion of the city limits.

Dumping outside the quarantine area or at the Dryden Transfer Station was in violation of the ban. On June 14, City Administrator Joel Walinski and Public Works Director Herb Amick met with the Q: How can I tell if a medicine or supplement is helping me?

My neighbor's grandmother was Native American and she always drank tea made with Tamarack needles. She'd gather only the young needles from the trees, and my neighbor SWEARS it really helps her arthritis. Is she crazy, or on to something?

Ibuprofen eases muscle aches in some people but when others try it, they don't get any relief. What's going on here?

If a medication is designed to treat or cure something and is approved by the Food and Drug Administration for it, you'd expect it to be able to do that for everyone, right? It certainly would be much easier if doctors could determine how a particular medicine would work on you BEFORE you buy it and take it. If only your doctor could be SURE that a particular medicine designed to treat the condition you are suffering from would "do the trick" and cure you.

If that were true it would make a doctor's job SO MUCH EASIER! They'd examine you, decide what's wrong, give you a particular medicine designed to treat it, and BAM! You're fixed. If only it was that simple.

Giving a medicine to treat a particular condition isn't predictable because we are all unique individuals when it comes to how we react to medicines, supplements and herbal products.

Despite our doctor's best efforts to match the medicine to our condition, no medicine works in everyone, and no medicine works the same in everyone. Even with the best medical science available today, doctors still can't predict exactly HOW a medicine, food supplement or herbal product will act inside you when you take it.

Ibuprofen, which is found in Advil®, and naproxen, the active ingredient in Aleve®, are very closely related and act to relieve pain and swelling in the same way. Despite their similarity, many people find that one works better for them or causes fewer side effects than the other one. And some people find that NEITHER one works for them. Why?

Medicines work a lot like keys, each with its particular shape. Each of these shapes or "keys" is designed to fit into a certain place in your body, much like a key fits into a lock. That place is called a "receptor" because it "receives" the key. Some of us have receptors that fit a particular key perfectly while others have receptors whose shape only fits part of the key. Other folk's receptors don't fit the key at all, which explains why medicines will work just fine for some people but only partly or not at all for others.

If your doctor gives you a medicine to lower your blood sugar, he or she will have a plan to check on how you are responding to it. That plan may include testing your blood sugar with a machine to show if and how well your new medicine is working for you. If your blood sugar levels don't change, then you're not responding to that medicine and another approach is needed.

Not everyone who takes a medicine, food supplement or herbal product responds to it. An herbal product may have dozens of glowing testimonials, but when we take it we each of us will respond to it in our own unique way.

The best way to determine if a supplement is helping you is to keep track of how it affects you.

In the words of a Chinese proverb, "The palest ink is better than the best memory."

Here are 5 steps to finding out if a supplement is helping you:

1. Decide what symptoms you want to relieve with the medicine or supplement you are planning to take. Ask yourself WHY you are taking it or what exactly it is that you want it to do. Do you want pain relief? Increased energy? Weight loss?
2. BEFORE you start taking it, document how you are doing on that symptom. If you want increased energy, score your energy level NOW on a scale of 1 to 5 or 1 to 10.
3. Start your new medicine or supplement.
4. Every few days or weeks, notice and score yourself on that symptom on the same scale.
5. Give it a few days to a few weeks, then look at your scores to see if there are any changes to your symptoms after you started the product. This helps you answer the question, "Is this really helping me?", and if not, you can stop it and try something else.

DOA to discuss the possibility of getting a permit so the city could continue dumping solid waste at Dryden.

"In order to continue our garbage dumping at Dryden, we had to agree to several points. One was to continue our spring and fall yard clean-up program. Continue having the recycle center collecting brush. We have to dispose of that brush within the quarantine area. Do education to try to keep the green waste out of the garbage," Amick said, at the Aug. 8 study session.

Councilman Elmer Larsen asked if the city could burn the brush from inside the city. For the Department of Ag., that is the preferred method, Amick said, but not for the Washington State Department of Ecology.

Amick said they were looking for some direction from the council.

"We have some options. The county opened their pit. We can take it there. The big question, we're not sure they'll take our bags. We can rent their chipper at $600 an hour. We can petition to get a special burning permit," Amick said.

Larsen suggested the city buy its own chipper. Mayor Cheri Kelley Farivar said a new chipper costs around $100,000.

"I think our path forward is we put in a request to get a burn permit from the DOE, which opens the door to them providing some type of funding for a chipper. One of the problems they have with the county, in terms of their chipper, they do allow people to come in and dump without inspecting.

At least in our unit, we can see what goes in," Walinski said.

The chips will have to stay within the quarantine area, Amick said.

As of July 31, the city was forced to cease hauling brush and green waste to Stemilt. As of Aug. 1, the city public works crew began preparing a site in the open space located at the cemetery for the stockpiling of yard waste to be chipped or burned.
