Tubers are coming down the Icicle Creek and Wenatchee River in record numbers this year. Due to the high water conditions, there have been a quite a few rescues of tubers floating past the checkpoint at Barn Beach.

High water, sunshine, massive amounts of tubers, prove to be dangerous combination

By IAN DUNN
EDITOR

Rescues on the Wenatchee River are up this year thanks to a dangerous combination of conditions. Because of the increased snow levels, there has been high, swift water in the river for much later in the season.

Cascade Medical EMT Lester Stoltz, who also serves on the Chelan County Swift Water Rescue Team, was a river guide for 10 years on the Wenatchee River.

“People generally don’t think about that too much unless it is flood stage. They just plan their vacation every year on the Fourth of July and they don’t really know the river might be a little higher,” Stoltz said. “This year, in particular, I think we saw increase there. I think we’re also seeing an increase in tubers and stand up paddle boarders. I think people are doing less extreme sports. They are doing this, because it is easier and doesn’t take a lot of training.”

Last year, there were 27 rescues on the river. There have been eight in the past two months, but no fatalities. The season is not over yet, Stoltz points out. The trouble has been mainly with the tubers floating past the check point, getting into trouble further down river.

Tubers either start from the bridge on Icicle Road or at the hatchery. They float down into town, then around Barn Beach, get out of the river on one side or the other.

“With the higher water level, the Barn Beach rapid, they were able to float right through it. With the water level dropping, it becomes much more difficult to get through that rapid. It’s not a natural rapid because of the logging industry. I think there was a dam built there. When the dam was destroyed, all the debris was left,” Stoltz said. “It’s actually makes a natural choke point for tubers, so I don’t think we see as many go past there.”

Past the checkpoint is Hobo Gulch, which is a straight shot of pretty fast moving water. Stoltz said it is hard to get out of there river there. It leads into Boulder Bend, where they get most of their call outs.

“It’s just a big class 3 rapid with pretty big hydraulics with a lot of rocks, making a big, sweeping right hand turn,” Stoltz said. “The currents push you in different direction and that can be very difficult to manage.”

Fortunately, Stoltz said, there has been some good press, because he’s seen a lot of kids in life jackets, but not so much the adults. He believes because of the big companies, managing it really well, to the bystander, it looks like an amusement ride.

“They get dropped off, they get picked up. It seems really simple, but it still is a wild river. It still is not guaranteed you are going to go down this path or that. There’s also lots of people going online, looking at pictures, clicking ‘book me’ with very little conversation with anyone,” Stoltz said. “They just show up and go down the river from there. They may or may not be able to swim and may not have any experience in a wild river.”

Stoltz said they’ve noticed most of their rescues were taking place after the Leavenworth Outdoor Center, a local tube rental company, was closed.

“They do a great job of organizing a lot of people down the river. They staff very well for it. They put staff members on the river’s edge. What we’ve noticed, with the water up and people being able to float by there, as soon as they pulled their staff member on the paddle board and their stop sign off the river, people were floating past,” Stoltz said.

Stoltz said he’s even seen people make the mistake of putting in at Barn Beach instead of taking out there. He thinks maybe they are staying at the KOA with the belief they can just float back down to their camp spot.

To help guide tubers after Leavenworth Outdoor Center is closed, Stoltz said they put up a sign to try and guide tubers. When a river call goes out, the Chelan County Sheriff’s Office is in charge of all search and rescues in Chelan County.

Chelan County Fire District 3 and Cascade Medical ambulance band together. The Swift Water rescue team is part of that. Stoltz has been a volunteer for 3-4 years. He said CM has 2-4 swift water trained people. It’s not a job requirement, but the hospital does support it.

“The events are very taxing on the system, as far as fire, police, EMS. When one of these events go out, it is very dynamic. There are a lot of people involved. There may be up to 20 people between fire, sheriff and ambulance service,” Stoltz said. “A lot of times we have multiple victims. It is difficult because they are spread out. A lot of times, the fire chief will take over command of the whole scene, then the sheriff will plug in where they are needed.”

Stoltz said they’ve done a lot of training, particularly around Boulder Bend, to learn the area as best they can. At one point this season, he said they were called out three nights in a row after the Leavenworth Outdoor Center took their signs down and pulled their guy.

Chelan County Sheriff Sergeant Kent Sisson said the water level has remained higher and swifter than in past years, so that has added to the amount of incidents they’ve responded to on the river along with the fire district and EMS.

“As with normal, these folks are often not prepared and not experienced on the river, which creates an issue for us. They don’t take out at the right location. If they are on a tube or small raft, they’ll put in at the fish hatchery and not take out by Barn Beach, which you hope people can do. If they get into swift water without a personal floatation device or decent raft, you’re going to have difficulties downriver from Barn Beach,” Sisson said.

Most of time, Sisson said it is a preparedness issue, people not experienced on the river, which creates an issue for them.

“Just this last month, there have been about eight different incidents, which is more than normal. We’re lucky we haven’t had significant injuries or deaths this year so far. There’s been a lot of folks stranded in the water that have been rescued,”

Chelan County PUD abandons Peshastin-to-Dryden pipeline project

By IAN DUNN
EDITOR

It seemed like a great solution to help address the phosphorus issues at Peshastin and Dryden wastewater facilities, build a pipeline connecting the two towns. According the PUD Water and Wastewater Manager, Ron Slabaugh, things were looking good during the planning stage.

“As we moved from planning into design, we got a more thorough idea of the cost. The design level estimate exceeded our planning level estimates. When we considered with the competitive nature of grant funding and the lack of available grant funding, we just came to the conclusion that it was not a feasible project,” Slabaugh said.

The total cost for the project would have been about $4.5 million. Slabaugh said when you look at the population in Peshastin and Dryden, that equates to a cost of about $90,000 per customer for that project.

Simply put, there were not enough people to spread out the cost.

“Granted, over time, with that pipeline going through undeveloped land, particularly into the Peshastin urban growth area, there is the potential for more connections, but that doesn’t help with the initial construction costs nor the long term feasibility of being responsible for that much infrastructure that we have to maintain and be responsible for the replacement,” Slabaugh said.

The cost factor was just one thing, he said. The soil type has a lot of cobble and boulders. That material would have to be hauled away and new material brought in. It was looking at the cost of highway and bridge crossings.

There were several of those, he said, because the pipeline path would be in-and-out the Department of Transportation right-of-way.

“We would have been in Chelan County right-of-way, so it would have been within Chelan County’s road restoration requirements, in terms of the amount of asphalt paving,” Slabaugh said. “Another consideration is the bidding climate. In the last couple years, our economy has taken off again. Some say growth is at or exceeding the levels we saw in 2007 before the economy took a downturn and construction prices go up.”

File photo

In March 2016, the PUD presented possible routes for a Peshastin to Dryden wastewater pipeline. Now, the PUD has abandoned the effort due to cost concerns.

In terms of addressing the phosphorus discharge into the Wenatchee River, per Washington Department of Ecology mandate, Slabaugh said they are on track for Peshastin, designing treatment improvements to help comply with the requirement.

At Dryden, he said there were able to get Ecology to agree to let them focus on Peshastin first, then regroup and work with Ecology to come up with something cost effective at Dryden.

Tubing: The tubers floating past the check point are private tubers

Sisson said. In terms of the rescues, Sisson said some are self-rescues. Other times, people are rescued by those passing by. Sometimes people end up on an island, log or rock. Those folks do need to be rescued.

"There's been some where we've actually had to pull them from the river channel with the Chelan County Swift Water team," Sisson said. "It's a team effort between the fire district, us and EMS to get there. The priority is to get there as quickly as we can and be organized, get folks into the right locations, so we can make the rescue or at least spot the subject in distress."

Even though there have been lots of incidents on the river, there has not been a fatality. Sisson hopes they can make it through the season without one.

"There was an incident on the Methow River where the subject was swept away trying to rescue his dog. He ended up being swept 14 miles downstream. We assisted with that one," Sisson said. "Hopefully, people will use common sense when they go in the water and take out at the right point."

Dave Johnson, the owner of the Leavenworth Outdoor Center, said this season has been busier than ever. Even with the high water, Johnson said there have been no additional challenges, as they already have safety programs in place and people on the water.

The tubers floating past his check point are private tubers, he said.

"We already have our system in place, having a person in the water and a stop sign on the beach. Everyone else has begun to depend on us being out there, so when we're done for the day and closed, then I've just learned people are having trouble because the signs are gone," Johnson said.

The pull-out point for Leavenworth Outdoor Center is just above Barn Beach on the same side of the river. Johnson said they account for all their guests before leaving the river, usually around 6 p.m.

"We even run a sweep at the end of the day, like the ski patrol does in the winter time. We do the same thing. We send a person down each route, the Icicle Creek and Wenatchee River," Johnson said. "We look for all of our guests. Once all our guests are in, then we would bring in our personnel and take our signs down."

Johnson said they are seeing record numbers of tubers this year, he believes, not due to the weather or river conditions.

"I think just more to do with increased population on the west side, putting more pressure on people getting out for the weekend. That combined with the growing popularity of the sport. I just think we're just following average growth. I don't think it is about weather or river conditions. Customers really don't understand that," Johnson said.

In other parts of the country, Stoltz said laws have been created to manage the thousands of tubers on rivers. On these rivers, there might be 3,000-5,000 tubers on a particular day. Stoltz said there's probably 2,000 here.

"We're not that far from it becoming a real issue," Stoltz said.

Stoltz has some advice for the tubers. Know your put-in and take-out and what is in between. Use a guide service, if you don't know the river. Always wear a life jacket. Don't strap yourself to a tube or another tuber.

PD grad named head coach of Boise State Hockey Club

By IAN DUNN
EDITOR

The journey of Lloyd Ayers has been an interesting one, from basketball player at Peshastin-Dryden to hockey coach at the Boise State Hockey Club. A 1980 graduate of PD, Ayers did not play hockey as a youth.

He only became involved in hockey in 1999 when his two boys were wanting to play hockey when they were younger. He says it just took off from there.

"I spent a lot of my time doing the practices. It was colder standing on the sideline that being out on the ice," Ayers said. "I made my choice to go out there and help. It progressed from there. I went from being a level one coach in USA hockey to being a level five coach, which is their highest level. I've been through the ranks with USA hockey."

In order to rise up through the coaching ranks, Ayers took every new class available. He took time going through the books learning what he could do through their process of becoming a coach.

"When my oldest son was 12-13, I realized I could spend a lot of time helping and developing kids, so that's where that went. Just more of the want to develop and work with kids," Ayers said.

He started out with the youth programs in Idaho Falls, then he was transferred to Boise for his job, a project manager for a lumber company.

"I went through the ranks of the ages, from mites up to midgets and then AA U18 midgets, then high school," Ayers said. "I am still coaching the high school program. Then, the opportunity came for Boise State. I put an application in for that."

At Boise State University, hockey is a club sport, not an NCAA sport, though Ayers hopes to change that. They still play a challenging schedule against teams like University of Washington, Arizona State, Weber State and San Jose State.

One of the biggest challenges for Ayers is the recruiting. He's leaning on his assistant coaches for that.

"I've actually have a couple coaches with me who have worked in that aspect. Some that are new to it as well. It's a new process here. Boise State is new to hockey. They've had a club program off and on. I would like to see it become a Division 1 hockey program. That is our goal," he said.

Coaching at Boise State is a part time job.

"Boise State does not have ice, so we have to rent space at a local ice rink. Hopefully, we'll eventually get to that level. Until then, it's part time," he said.

The season for the Boise State Hockey Club starts Sept. 30.

Abandoned Pipeline: Cost prohibitive

"I don't know exactly what that looks like now. Ecology is more interested in us getting Peshastin done now. We'll work with them on Dryden in the near future," Slabaugh said.

The increased cost estimate did not come as a surprise, he said.

"I think it was in March of 2016 when we had a community meeting. Our cost estimates were coming together. We also heard back from the state that the grant request we put in for the project hadn't been funded," Slabaugh said. "The state has had a fair amount of problems with the availability of grant funding in the last couple years. With the lack of available funding and the cost of the project, it just makes us take another look at it."

He's hoping the state is able to work with them to come up with a more cost effective solution for Dryden. The pipeline project may be on the back burner, but could it come into play down the road as part of the utility regionalization study coming up?

"That's more looking at the financial side of the utilities, not necessarily looking at options connecting these facilities together. It's not a physical feasibility, it is operations and management," he said. "One of the options that will be looked is making Chelan PUD the owner operator of all of those water and wastewater utilities. There could be other options as well. We've not had the kickoff meeting with the consultant yet."

This study is basically a high level look at the feasibility not really about putting pipes in the ground.

"The idea is that, if you have one owner-operator, there are economies of scale that one owner-operator might not have versus what we have right now, four separate owner-operators, Cashmere, Leavenworth, Peshastin and Dryden," Slabaugh said.

Free Clinic still open and ready to serve New clinic opening in Plain

By IAN DUNN
EDITOR

The Upper Valley MEND Free Clinic is still around, but seeing a drop in patients. Program Manager Terri Weiss believes the decline is due the Affordable Care Act, in that more people have insurance now.

She said it is a good thing that there is a fairly large segment of the middle class now getting insurance, but some policies have a rather large deductible, which is where the Free Clinic might help.

"Many of the people, their insurance doesn't kick in until they hit the deductible. Most deductibles are around $2,000. The reality is, many of the people who have insurance have trouble meeting the deductible. That is a new group of people who we would like to open our services to,"

Weiss said they are open to all uninsured people or people that cannot afford to go to the doctor because of the deductible. She said these people can come to the clinic to see a doctor or get financial assistance through Cascade Medical.

The Free Clinic is from 6:30 to 8 p.m. every Monday at Cascade Medical. Patients are seen by the primary care doctors at CM, who are volunteering their time. Patients can also get dental care at the clinic.

"One of the dentists in the community, Dr. Ryan Busk, comes the first Monday of every month. He does evaluations at the clinic. What I found through a survey, very few people know this dental clinic exists," Weiss said. "The person won't get the care that Monday night because we don't have a dental office. Dr. Busk will do an oral exam and gives the patients options. The patients can follow him to his office. There is also another dentist that supports our program. We can arrange for that patient to be seen at that office."

The Upper Valley Free Clinic has seen a drop in patients since the implementation of the Affordable Health Care Act. They are still trying to attract the uninsured and those with high deductible insurance.

The dentists give the Free Clinic a discount. Donations pay the dentist for the treatment they receive, so there is no cost to the patient for going to the dentist. It is supported through donations, like the Kahler Glen golf tournament, Swing for Smiles, which is one of the biggest supporters of the dental program.

Because there is not much clarity about what the insurance companies are going to do, Weiss said she is launching a pilot clinic in Plain.

"It's the Plain-Lake Wenatchee community, opening a registered nurse free clinic, where we can triage patients to the free clinic or direct them to Cascade Medical for any urgent condition. The nurse will make that decision," she said.

Before the appointment, Weiss said the patients will see someone about financial assistance.

"Many people also are eligible for sliding scale. They may not know they are eligible for it. For instance, a family of four with a take home income of $50,000, they actually would qualify for some discount on their services from Cascade Medical, even if they have insurance," she said.

The nurse clinic in Plain is a new healthcare model to assist people with how to access healthcare, if they don't feel like they can afford it or even with insurance. She wants to reach out to the underinsured population. If this is successful, it could be expanded to other clinics in Peshastin and Dryden.

The Plain nurse clinic is from 4 to 6 p.m. the first Thursday of the month at the pantry, the local food bank. "It's specifically for the Plain community. I'm not diagnosing and treating, just triaging access to the care they need. We might refer people to the Free Clinic," she said.

Leavenworth Summer Theater presents the '60s classic, Bye Bye Birdie

By IAN DUNN
EDITOR

A 1963 classic comes to life at the Hatchery Park Stage as the Leavenworth Summer Theater presents, Bye Bye Birdie. It is the first time LST has presented the musical comedy.

The director and choreographer, Casey Adam Craig, is new to LST as well. She has been teaching dance classes in the Central Washington University Theater Department for the past year. Prior to that, she was a theater performer and arts educator working with the 5th Avenue Theater, Village Theater and Holland America Cruise Lines.

This is actually the sixth time she has worked on Bye Bye Birdie.

"I love Bye Bye Birdie. It's always fun to see what different actors bring to the roles each time. Just a fun show set in the late 1950s and early '60s. The cartoony characters that emerge within that," Craig said.

Casting was an interesting experience for her. There are five days of casting for Leavenworth Summer Theater. The actors audition for all three shows. Then, they go through a call back process for all three shows as well.

"In that, they have to prepare different pieces of music and different sides of scripts to bring into both their audition and call back. Then, within that, they also have to do several dance auditions for all three productions," Craig said.

Craig is very pleased with her cast. She calls them "small and mighty." There is a cast of 19 people, all playing multiple parts.

"It's a smaller cast so it is really a collaborative process. We've given multiple parts to individual actors, so it really gives them chance to create multiple different characters within the ensemble of the production," Craig said.

Ernest Palmer plays Albert Peterson. The LST vet is very busy this summer, appearing as a lead in all three shows. Rose Alvarez is being played by Jacklyn Stapp.

"She is coming to us from New York. She worked with Stiletto Entertainment and Holland America Cruise Lines. Other leads are a lot of CWU students and Ally Atwood plays Mae Peterson, Albert's mother," Craig said.

Jakob Roman is playing Conrad Birdie. Local favorite, Gary Hesse, is Mr. MacAfee.

The show opened last night. It continues Aug. 5, 10, 15, 19, 24, 29, Sept. 1 at 8 p.m. at the Hatchery Park Stage.

Ian Dunn can be reached at 548-5286 or editor@leavenworthecho.com.

Leavenworth Villages Voices invites you to the first rehearsal of their 35th season on Aug. 21, from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Leavenworth Community United Methodist Church, located at 418 Evans Street. They are especially in need of male voices. Rehearsals take place each Monday evening at the same time and place. For additional information, please visit www.leavenworthvillagevoices.org

SUBMITTED BY ALLISON BERGSTROM

The Leavenworth Villages Voices (LVV) invites prospective and returning members to our third annual Season Opener Picnic on Monday, Aug. 14, at Lions Club Park in Leavenworth from 5:30 to 8 p.m. LVV members will provide food and beverages (as well as guitar accompaniment for a sing-along), and the Leavenworth Christmas Tubas plan to entertain us all.

The picnic offers an opportunity for people who are considering joining and want to learn more about the group, requirements, and commitment before making a decision. In particular, the choir aims to pick up some additional male voices this year.

Perhaps you haven't joined in the past because you did not want to audition or you don't read music. Have no fear! As a community choir, there are no auditions. Reading music is not required, as practice CDs are provided so that one's part may be learned by ear. All are welcome to join who can commit to regularly attending rehearsals, practicing between rehearsals, and memorizing their music and lyrics.

"We strive to achieve a balance of performance excellence while remaining a true community choir where everyone is welcome," says Larry Henderson, now in his 17th year as director.

The 2017 season marks the 35th anniversary of the Leavenworth Village Voices, a non-profit organization founded in 1982 by Eleanor Culling, who passed away last year. Eleanor dreamt of forming a community choir of men and women who share a passion for singing.

The LVV is honored and excited to keep Eleanor's dream alive. Our members love to share the joy and peace of Christmas music while contributing to Leavenworth's Bavarian theme and festive atmosphere.

Since 2015 the LVV has performed exclusively during the Christmas season. In addition to the annual "Christmas in the Mountains" concert series, the choir will perform during Christkindlmarkt and the Christmas Lighting Festival, including caroling in small groups downtown to spread Christmas cheer.

LVV also entertains privately for tour groups, caregiving facilities, and charity events. The Ladies' Ensemble—a voluntary subset of the choir—performs at some additional festivals and functions throughout the year.

LVV rehearsals take place on Monday evenings from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Leavenworth Community United Methodist Church, 418 Evans Street in Leavenworth. The first rehearsal is on Aug. 21.

Anyone who is interested in joining the LVV but is unable to make the picnic is welcome to attend the first rehearsal. For additional information, please visit our website at www.leavenworthvillagevoices.org and go to the "Contact Us" tab.

The 2017 "Christmas in the Mountains" concert series will be held at the Leavenworth Church of the Nazarene on Dec. 1, 8, and 10. Tickets may be purchased at the door or in advance at the Leavenworth Chamber of Commerce by calling 548-5807.

With rates still low, should you borrow money?

Rather than write about the economy, or the still-rising stock market, or the financial policies of soon-to-be President Mike Pence, I want to talk about an important family-level financial planning topic: Debt.

Imagine that you want to buy a slick new car, or a new house, or toy. Should you use your savings for that purchase, or borrow money from a bank? The first, most important question to consider is whether you need to buy that shiny new thing at all. Often, the biggest money mistake people make is simply buying too much stuff. However, assuming it's a good purchase on something meaningful to your life, there's still the question: Should you take out a loan, or use your own savings?

I've found that debt is one of those things, much like paying taxes, that gets people overly emotional and irrational. So, let me give you a very logical way to think about debt. If you have to pay a 50 percent interest rate to borrow money, it will never be a good idea. On the other hand, if you can secure a loan with a zero percent rate, you should probably borrow as much as the bank will let you. So, the interest rate you're getting charged is the first key question.

BRAD BLACKBURN

But there's another side to that same question. If you use the banks money for your purchase, what other opportunities do you have with your money? If your only plan is to park it in a savings account getting zero interest, then you might as well use your own money rather than paying a bank any interest rate. On the other hand, if your money is wisely invested by your amazing financial advisor, and you really believe it has a chance of growing, maybe you should keep your money invested and use the banks money for that new purchase.

If you want to be strictly mathematical and logical about debt, that's the way to think about it: What's going to give you the biggest payoff in the end? However, as I mentioned before, debt isn't an entirely logical thing. There's a very human, very emotional side to debt as well. Many people are stressed out by the obligation to make a payment to someone else every month – and not having debt just feels good. So, you have to consider for yourself: How valuable it is to you to you personally not have debt? Are you one of those people that would sleep a lot better at night without debt? If so, there's value in that. Even if the logical, mathematical argument favors taking out a big loan – that might not be the best option for you. There's a lot of value to sleeping well at night.

First Washington regiment saluted for service in Philippines

When the United States declared war on Spain following the sinking of the battleship Maine in 1898, Admiral George Dewey and his six ships were in Hong Kong.

He received the order to proceed to Manila Bay and destroy the Spanish fleet of superior size stationed there. Proceeding, the Americans came upon the vessels and sank or disabled the 10 gunboats and cruisers and left them in shambles without the loss of a single American life for the men of the Asiatic Squadron.

The victory made the United States an important power in the Pacific and drew attention to her Navy's usefulness in times of war.

Afterward, Dewey remained in Manila Bay until the Army's Philippine Islands Expeditionary Force arrived.

Admiral Dewey was a graduate of the Naval Academy in 1858 and had taken part in the Civil War. His flagship was the U.S.S. Olympia. As men taking part in the fighting in the Philippines landed, he came back to the United States. It had been one year since the declaration of war came.

Deliberations in Paris proceeded for many months until the United States agreed to purchase the Philippine Islands and three other Pacific Ocean Spanish strongholds for $20 million. During this time Hawaii ceased to be a republic.

The war was formally declared over in April 1899 but the insurgents in the Philippines continued fighting.

The first action our First Washington men took part in was in February when Manila was attacked. The engagement lasted some eight-and-a-half hours. There were to be many more for these latecomers.

When the war began, the First Washington Regiment contained 1,300 men and was an infantry or foot soldier unit of a dozen companies. It was often used with troops of the regular army. During a battle in March, the gallantry of our soldiers was saluted by the Washington State Senate by a resolution of respect.

They were on the front lines every day. In battle their wounded and dead totaled more than any others.

They had suffered the loss of 38 in battle and 111 wounded in the 35 battles in which they took a prominent part. They had been part of the Philippine Island Expeditionary force under Brigadier General King. When King returned in August 1899, our men also returned.

As news of their return came, plans were made for a gala celebration both in San Francisco and Seattle. A banquet at the ferry depot and tours about the city made their arrival special. When it came to traveling to our state, a good many refused to go further in a ship. Seasickness was not amusing and they paid their own way to head home by train.

Admiral George Dewey

left Hong Kong in the U.S.S. Olympia several months later. Reams about his part in the Pacific had been spread by newspapers across the nation. Banquets, speeches, flowers, the cheers during parades rang in his ears.

When he reached New York City, he was told that anything he desired as a reward for his heroism for his country he had only to ask for. A place in which to live was one of the gifts that came his way.

In November, the admiral took a bride in Washington, D.C. Again he received much adulation. When sometime later he turned over the house given him as a reward for service to his country to his new wife, it riled the newspapers and they turned against the admiral.

Dewey remarked later, "I would never have believed that the American people who made such a hero of me two months ago would in this brief period, so turn against me as to fill columns of newspapers with the worst kind of abuse. I would like to go abroad and not return, if it was not that I still care greatly for my country." Ignoring the scandal, a new Board of the Navy was approved with Admiral Dewey at its head. For nearly two decades he was called on for advice concerning this branch of the government. He died in 1917.

Meanwhile, the president and his cabinet attended services at Arlington cemetery for the war dead who were buried with full military honors, increasing the number interred there by 336. (Dead from the Philippines were interred in the islands.)

Q: One of my neighbors swears that Bag Balm® helps cure foot fungus. Is that true?

No, not really. Applying Bag Balm® to your athlete's foot may help it from spreading but frankly, it's more likely to make it WORSE. Most organisms will grow better when they are placed in their favorite conditions. Although many plants grow much better in sunlight some actually prefer shady conditions. Some plants like grasses and corn love to be watered, while others like iris, cacti and some house plants have roots that can rot all too easily if they get too much water.

Fungus and yeast organisms have their own favorite growing conditions: warm, dark and moist places. This is why you'll find fungus and yeast more often between your toes or in your groin area instead of on the tops of your feet or on your elbows. Your baby or grandbaby can also get a diaper rash from yeast if they don't have their diaper changed frequently.

Bag Balm® has 3 main ingredients: petroleum jelly, which we know as Vaseline®, lanolin which is also called wool fat, and 8-hydroxyquinoline, an anti-infective. Bag Balm® was originally marketed to dairy farmers to smear on the udders of their cows in order to prevent skin irritation and speed the healing of minor cuts and scrapes. Although licensed for Veterinary Use Only, most farmers also used it on themselves and their family members for their own cuts and chapped skin, with good results, and today many homes wouldn't be without Bag Balm® in its iconic bright green square can.

8-hydroxyquinoline is considered an excellent topical anti-infective and is also available for cuts and scrapes as the active ingredient in liquid bandages such as New Skin®. The 19th edition of the United States Dispensary published in 1907 describes it as a very powerful antiseptic. 8-hydroxyquinoline can stop the growth of bacteria and fungi by combining with certain trace minerals found on the surface of bacteria and fungi. This poisons them and prevents these microorganisms from reproducing and causing an infection.

Although 8-hydroxyquinoline can keep fungus from growing, putting it on your feet won't guarantee you'll eliminate athlete's foot. That's because Bag Balm® is an ointment. Ointments restore moisture to your skin by trapping moisture underneath it. Your body continuously gives off moisture through your breath, your sweat and through the pores of your skin. Creams help trap that moisture next to your skin before it evaporates, but ointments do that even better. The best way to soothe dry skin is to get it wet, pat it only partly dry and then put some ointment on it. This traps the moisture in the skin.

Bag Balm® only comes as an ointment. Using ointment on your feet can be helpful if your skin is chapped, dry or cracked but unfortunately it also helps fungus grow faster and better. If you put ointment on your feet and then put on your socks and shoes, you're actually helping your foot fungus grow because you've given it a warm, dark and moist place. Instead of reaching for a can of Bag Balm® to treat foot fungus I recommend keeping your feet as dry as possible, changing your socks frequently, using an antifungal powder cream until the fungus gets under control, and then using a spray powder every day after that to prevent it from coming back.

Q: Can I use Bag Balm® for my baby's diaper rash? I don't recommend it. Babies have much thinner skin than children or adults, and the genital area has the thinnest skin of all. The thinner the skin, the more easily you can absorb compounds into your body that are applied to your skin. Broken or blistered skin is even more likely to absorb stuff that was intended only for use on the outside, not the inside.

Years ago an antiseptic cleanser called PhisoHex® was used to wash newborn infants. It contained hexachlorophene, an antiseptic skin cleanser that killed bacteria on the skin. Even though it was only used on unbroken skin, some of the babies absorbed enough of the hexachlorophene through their skin to trigger seizures. When treating a diaper rash, wash the area gently and let it dry completely before using any cream, ointment or other protectant. Using an ointment on the diaper area is helpful if the diaper rash is not yeast. Because babies have such thin, sensitive skin it's best to completely avoid using anything with an anti-infective ingredient in the diaper area.

Climate Change & Science

Steve McIntyre, Yamal: A "Divergence" Problem

The original IPCC "hockey stick" graph was the centerpiece of Michael Mann's "proof" that mankind was responsible for global warming—research that was discredited because it relied on incorrect statistics. Before then, Mann's information was used many times and by many scientists in other research. When correct data was applied, the hockey stick disappears.

No matter how much proof is offered that mankind has had minimal or no impact on global temperature, there are those who would still rather believe gross distortions and lies based on science fraud than the truth, wrote environmental scientist Dr. Michael S. Coffman in the Fall edition of RANGE magazine.

"Today's problem with the man-caused warming hypothesis was that it was never tested to determine if it was true," he explained. "The purpose of the United Nations Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) was to 'provide the world with a clear scientific view on the current state of knowledge on climate change and its potential environmental and socio-economic impacts.'"

It was a given that CO2 was driving climate change. Any scientist who challenged the "fact" was immediately attacked and isolated by the press. No matter how many experiments showed that solar changes were a far better predictor of global climate change than CO2, the IPCC, PHOTO CREDIT: Internet Michael S. Coffman, Ph.D., 1943-2017. Dr. Coffman was president of Environmental Perspectives Inc., and CEO of Sovereignty International in Bangor, Maine. He had over 30 years of university teaching, research and consulting experience in forestry and environmental sciences.

Environmental Protection Agency and opposing scientists did all they could to trash and bury contrary theories.

Over time the "proofs" that man was causing global warming have been systematically disproved. One of the worst was the "hockey stick" graph of Dr. Michael E. Mann of Pennsylvania State University. Mann's graph showed a relatively flat temperature for over the past 1,900 years, when it suddenly shot up in the 20th Century. Dr. Coffman contends that Mann used the wrong statistics, which always gave a hockey stick appearance no matter how random the data was. Mann's calculations also ignored the well-established historical event, the Little Ice Age during 1650 to 1710, Coffman wrote.

Mann was recently involved in a Canadian trial, which could have far reaching impact, and has been referred to as the "climate science trial of the century."

Why Scientists Disagree

Dr. Coffman spelled out why scientists disagree on climate change:

•Climate is an interdisciplinary subject requiring insights from many fields of study. Very few scholars have mastery of more than one or two of these disciplines.

•Fundamental uncertainties arise from insufficient observational evidence, disagreements over how to interpret data, and how to set the parameters of models.

•IPCC, created to find and disseminate research finding a human impact on global climate, is not a credible source. It is agenda-driven, a political rather than scientific body, and some allege it is corrupt.

•Climate scientists, like all humans, can be biased. Origins of bias include careerism, grant-seeking, political views, and confirmation bias.

"No consensus exists when it comes to climate science," Dr. Coffman wrote. "The only scientists the world hears from are the ones who toe the party line that mankind is destroying the planet with industrial progress."

Despite the verifiable evidence that warming is not happening, and even when it is, it is primarily caused by solar events, the agenda marches ever forward, Dr. Coffman said. The United States is branded at the international level as the cause of all the trouble and intentionally vilified. The truth is that the U.S. is the leader in reducing carbon emissions, which, in fact have plummeted since about 2007 and are now at 1994 levels. As important, as a percentage of total global CO2 emissions, the U.S. will make up a small amount, contrary to prevailing media accounts.

It's All About the Money

The entire man-caused climate change push is nothing more than a tool in the hands of the global elite to redistribute international wealth and destroy capitalism—especially the United States, a purpose globalists no longer try to keep hidden. Openly, time and time again at global climate meetings that birth international agreements, the theme is simple:

"The rich countries have caused all the natural disasters, famine and plague with their greedy use of carbon fuels," Dr. Coffman cited. Also, "the rich countries must pay for their sins by giving billions of dollars to the 'poor' countries," he said, adding that the poor countries want the handouts to be retroactive. Brazil even put forth a proposal for just how the U.S. and other first world nationals could hand over the dough.

Meanwhile, China, which has six of the top 23 most polluted cities on the planet, won't have to reduce carbon emissions until 2030.

A digital version of Dr. Michael Coffman's analysis, "Climate Lies," can be found by visiting rangemagazine.com.
