By IAN DUNN
EDITOR

A glissading accident on Asgaard Pass has apparently claimed the life of a 19-year old Mercer Island man. Glissading is where the participant slides down a steep slope of snow with the support of an ice axe. It can be very dangerous. This is latest glissading accident at Asgaard Pass. Last year, a 24-year old Chinese man was killed while glissading with coworkers. In 2011, a 21-year old Eatonville woman was killed there.

This latest accident was reported just after 5 p.m. on Sunday, June 4. It occurred below the summit of Asgaard Pass, between Colchuck Peak and Dragontail Mountain, according to a news release from the Chelan County Sheriff's Office.

A satellite text message was relayed to the Washington State Department of Emergency Management. The message stated there had been an accident in which a man had fallen into a hole and disappeared under the snowpack. There were GPS coordinates, but no other information in the message.

The Chelan County Sheriff's Office called out the mountain rescue team. A Lifeflight medical helicopter was requested along with a hoist equipped helicopter. The Snohomish County Office "SnoHawk 10" helicopter assisted with the search and rescue effort.

Attempts to locate the missing man were unsuccessful, as the water runs deep under the snowpack. The search was called off at about 8:30 p.m. The search was to continue Monday morning. The name of the man was being withheld pending notification of next of kin.

Last year, searchers could not find the body of He Qi initially on June 5, 2016. His body was finally located a month later.

The CCSO reports the 19-year old and one other person were attempting to glissade down the snowfield from the summit of Asgaard Pass to the glacier area below.

"Glissading is the act of intentionally descending down a steep slope in a controlled slide on a person's feet or buttocks. It routinely involves the use of an ice-axe or similar device to assist in controlling the slide. Glissading is a high-risk activity due to the unforeseen dangers, such as holes or crevasses, in the snow path," said Chelan County Sheriff Sergeant Kent Sission.

Illegal grows hurting local forest; public safety top priority

SUBMITTED BY HOLLY KRAKE

Dust swirls in the air as a helicopter lifts drug task force officers above national forest lands just west of Wenatchee. Their mission-eradicate thousands of illegal marijuana plants from cultivation sites within the Forest. Below, an interdisciplinary team from the Chelan County Sheriff, US Forest Service, Washington Department of Ecology Hazmat Division and the Drug Enforcement Administration wait for the first plants to be hauled out.

"Illegal grow operations are a serious problem," said USFS Law Enforcement Officer, Mike Kujala. "These type of operations can compromise public safety in the woods and cause long-lasting ecological damage."

It is common at these types of illegal grow sites to find water diverted from natural streambeds, acres of trees cut down, trash littering the forest floor and unknown herbicides and pesticides in use.

"Nobody wants a potential hazmat site on the Forest," added Kujala. "Growing on public lands is never a victim-

Forest visitors are encouraged to report any suspected illegal cultivation sites to local law enforcement officials. However, for public safety do not approach a suspected site at any time and leave the area as soon as possible; illegal growers can be armed and dangerous. ## Grammy nominated Spektral Quartet to perform at Snowy Owl Theater

Wenatchee native Russell Rolan plays cello for the groundbreaking group

By IAN DUNN
EDITOR

The groundbreaking Spektral Quartet is coming to Leavenworth. The recently Grammy nominated group, which is based in Chicago, includes cellist Russell Rolan, who grew up in Cashmere and Wenatchee.

His mother is noted local piano teacher Joan Johnson.

"I started from a very young age, four years old, playing the piano. I studied with my mother and other teachers," Rolan said. "I started playing the cello when I was eight years old. I was playing orchestras growing up. I played with the Wenatchee Valley Symphony starting in eighth grade. I was in orchestra, choir at the high school."

He went on to study music in college, at the Peabody Conservatory of Music in Baltimore. After graduating, he moved to Chicago, where he did some graduate work at Northwestern. The quartet began, unassumingly, in 2009.

"After I finished my graduate work, I had some friends here in town whose company I enjoy," Rolan said. "We wanted to get together and play. We would bring a stack of music and a case of beer, just go through it. For the better

Frisbee for Hope fundraiser raises money for Liberian college student

By IAN DUNN

A recent fundraiser at Cascade High School raised enough money to fund an African college student for the next year. The Frisbee for Hope fundraiser was held May 30 at CHS.

"It was a joint fundraiser between Cascade

These students formed a team to participate in the Ultimate Frisbee Competition.

High School's ASB and our 10th grade AVID (Advancement Via Individual Determination) class. We worked together to put on a fundraiser to raise money through the Hope Project. There is recent graduate from the Hope Project by the name of Smith Smah. He's in his third year of college in Liberia," said Malia Renner-Singer, AVID teacher. "Liberia is the fourth poorest country in the world. For $1,000, we could pay for one year of college for him. Our goal was to raise $1,000."

In 10th grade AVID, Renner-Singer said they focus on doing community service by way of a community service project. Last year, they did a field day at Peshastin-Dryden Elementary. Renner-Singer saw a Jackie Frasier's Facebook post about the Hope Project needing to raise money for college tuition for Smith.

Jackie son, Elijah, who is from Liberia, paid Smith's tuition last year.

"I brought this to my class in September and said this would be something really cool for us. Most of the AVID students will be first generation college students," Renner-Singer said. "They empathized a lot with Smith and loved the idea of sending somebody to college because that what we talk about so much in AVID.

We had some fundraising ideas, but nothing ever happened. We gave up for awhile."

One of Renner-Singer's AVID students approached the ASB, which was looking for a community service project benefitting something outside of Leavenworth. The Hope Project fundraiser fit in nicely.

Senior Olivia Stoddard came up with the idea for the Frisbee for Hope fundraiser. Stoddard sold bracelets for $5 to participate in the ultimate frisbee tournament. For $5, you could also watch the tournament.

"Basically, it was the last half of the day on Tuesday. If you had a bracelet, you got excused from third and fourth period class and you could come out to cheer on the teams," she said. "In addition, my AVID class sold snow cones, because it was hot out."

Renner-Singer said they raised well over $1,000. Bracelet sales alone raised $650. There were also donations from community businesses for the winning teams, from Munchen Haus, Hat Shop Wood Shop and The Hunter's Wife. Safeway donated the concessions.

"My students asked for donations and shopped for concessions. Olivia did all the work with the administrators, selling tickets. It was a really good collaboration between the ASB and AVID. The whole entire Cascade student body is funding this young man's dream, which is really cool," Renner-Singer said.

part of a year, it was just beer and Beethoven, I suppose. We were just having a good time."

People knew they were getting together, so the quartet played a concert here and there. It sort of grew gradually and organically from there, he said. Some quartets start in school, but there's was different, since they were all out of school.

Things were formalized with the quartet in 2011, along the same time they gained a residency at the University of Chicago. Rolen said they started having their own concert series in Chicago.

"We produced our own concert series and we tour quite a bit around the country. We've done some international traveling. Back in December, we were nominated for a grammy award," Rolen said. "We didn't win, but we got to go to the Grammys, which was quite an experience and really fun. We were kind of the nerds at the party because we were the classical people. It was really rewarding to be recognized like that."

The success, he said, is because they are trying relate to their audience in ways that hopefully feel authentic, contemporary and relatable. They play all different kinds of music. Of course, the golden oldies, like from Beethoven, but also contemporary music.

He said that has served them well.

"We've had lots of amazing artistic connections with very creative people, composers especially and artists of different disciplines when we work together on larger projects. It might be other musicians," Rolen said. "We've worked with visual artists, actors and directors, poets, all different kinds of artists. It's really about opening up what a string quartet can be."

A string quartet is a genre going back hundreds of years. It is revered as a vehicle for composers most sublime, most personal music expressions, he said. It has been known that way, as a medium of really intimate music making for many years.

"Our goal and mission is to bring that tradition into the 21st century and see where it goes and what it can be, not restricted only to old music but also find out it can be really relevant in people's lives as they take in works of art," Rolen said. "We've done things in the past that have really caught people's attention."

Two years ago, the Spektral Quartet commissioned over 40 composers to write miniatures, works of music between 1 and 30 seconds long. The prompt to the composers was, what do you want to hear coming from your phone?

"We had these great composers, some of the finest hear one of these short pieces, you'll wonder what was that and where can I hear more of that? Those are the types of projects they like to do, he musical minds in the business, people who have won the Pulitzer Prize, Guggenheim or MacArthur fellows, amazing musical thinkers, writing us ring tones basically," Rolen said. "It was a great project. It really brings the string quartet into everyday life. It makes it something that a general audience can appreciate. Hopefully, it is a window into many different kinds of music. Really ingenious treatment within the quartet in that short format."

The hope is, he said, if you although most projects are not like that.

The concert in Leavenworth will be a bit more of a traditional format, with some great works of music in a concert format. The mission is to bring the string quartet into modern life.

"The music we're playing will run the gamut. We're playing a gorgeous piece by Revell. One of the movements you might recognize by different movie scores. We have two new pieces that were written for us in the last year," Rolen

School District CTE program gives students real world experience

By IAN DUNN
EDITOR

Kirk Sunitsch heads up the CTE program at the Icicle River Middle School and Cascade High School. Previously called Vocational Education, CTE stands for career and technical education.

Sunitsch gave a presentation to the Cascade School Board at their May 23 meeting.

"The purpose of CTE is to provide diverse, relevant learning opportunities for students that prepare them for career and post secondary options," Sunitsch said.

Each year, the CTE program receives a $14,000 Perkins grant, which compels the program to keep data students. Sunitsch explained they input data into what they call a completer, which is a CTE student that completes 360 hours in a single pathway.

For example, if a student did Computer Science 1 and 2, they would be a completer.

"CTE completers graduate just above 91 percent. That's the kids that go through and take 360 hours of a single program of study. The compares to the graduation rate of the state, which is about 77 percent," Sunitsch said. "That is a big statistic that we see for kids that go through our program and around the state."

Programs of study in the CTE program include business and marketing, information technology, early childhood education, hospitality/tourism, computer science, fire science/wildland fire, visual arts and STEM (science, technology, engineering and math.)

Some of the classes are moving forward, he said, into AP (advanced placement) courses, like computer science. There are certain requirements for CTE courses, Sunitsch said.

"This is what we get audited on, for enhanced funding above and beyond general education to provide hands on opportunities for students," he said. "One of things you have to have is a state approved framework. It has all the state standards in there, math, science, English, technology. They also have industry standards. We also add those into the frameworks, along with leadership, which ties it activities outside the classroom, like field trips, internships, competitions."

Sunitsch said there are two types of certified CTE instructors.

"Type 1 is where you come from industry and use your experience, then go through a program to get the teaching part of it. Then, have 6,000 hours of teaching experience or work experience and you are certified," Sunitsch said. "A lot of our teachers are coming in right now directly from industry, which is awesome. A lot of our college programs can't give them as much, especially in the computer science and engineering. Those come directly from industry. It's different that general ed."

Sunitsch said they also must have leadership component attached to the courses, such as DECA. Each class has to show activities that they can take to a competition or attach to leadership. A skills gap analysis is also needed.

You have to prove the new classes serve a state or local need.

"You have find the statistics and it is part of getting the frameworks approved. We also have a community advisory board that oversees each of those programs of study," Sunitsch said. "We have to have certain things approved, all those minutes and notes for auditors to go through. They take a look at what we do and give us some great ideas."

Each one of the CTE programs has to have a three year plan, he said. These plans are looked at by the advisory board. If there is a new class, it has to be approved by the advisory board.

Board member Kristen Wood asked what a community advisory board looks like.

"The ultimate purpose and intention of these advisory boards is make sure our CTE classes and relevant to current industry standards and needs. That's one of the items I was tasked with when I started here," said CTE instructor James Graham. "I formed a committee of industry professionals. My advisors are an architect, mechanical engineer, industrial designer, project manager, general contractor. My class is in structure, plans and pathways. It insures relevancy."

The advisory board meetings are required each year, plus one general meeting which includes all the advisory boards.

"It's a great way to get input as to the relevance to industry standards, so we are teaching our kids what they see in industry," Sunitsch said. "We have a business and marketing advisory committee. The fire science acts as their own advisory."

Some of the courses planned for next year include engineering 1 and 2, renewable energy technology, and pre-engineering. There's another class, taught by Dane Lewman, where a Microsoft or Google engineering teaches a class via Skype.

There is culinary 1 and 2. A class on robotics and drones is new. Sunitsch said that will be one of their pathway courses taught seventh through 12th grade.

"The leadership component...we have DECA, which took over for FBLA (future business leaders of America.) We took six kids to Nationals this year. TSA (technology student association) is a new program linked to our seventh and eighth grade programs. We have three kids going to Nationals in June," Sunitsch said. "We're looking to expand that. TSA can start in the middle school and move to the high school. FFA (future farmers of America,) we're looking at changing. Because facilities, we have no greenhouse or barn. We're going to move toward Skills USA."

There are a lot of program linked to SkillsUSA, a student, teacher, industry partnership, he said, covering competition for CTE courses.

"One thing we are going to talk to advisory boards about is using SkillsUSA to cover FFA and FCLA. As a district, for the kids that just go back from state, we're going to support them at the Chelan County Fair in September," he said. "We're going to move toward SkillsUSA. We've heard some good things. We're going to send all our teachers to training. There's fire science competitions, culinary competitions, artistic competitions."

Wood asked whether small schools, like Cascade, were getting away from ag. Sunitsch said it depends on the facilities. Cashmere does a great job with it, but Cascade doesn't have greenhouse.

"If you have a landscaping class or horticulture class. One of the things is it has to be hands on. If you don't have a greenhouse, it's hard to have that," Sunitsch said. "It comes down to the amount of faculty that we have. With CTE, you want to look at high demand, high wage jobs, with engineering, CAD, with STEM. Another thing you look it is the funding with grants, especially for computer science and engineering."

Sunitsch said he is talking to the advisory boards to see where they are going with that.

"For me, as CTE director, to say this class is taught and tied to this competition, which I have to prove to auditors. SkillsUSA covers a much bigger gamut," Sunitsch said. "We're going to try it next year. With our facilities, we just aren't there yet. As we move forward, maybe we can put in a greenhouse. We're going to look at it for other classes."

Superintendent Bill Motsenbocker said Wellness Committee member Danielle Gibbs is raising money for a greenhouse. Motsenbocker said she's expressed an interest in running it.

Bavarian Folk Dance Group has room for new dancers

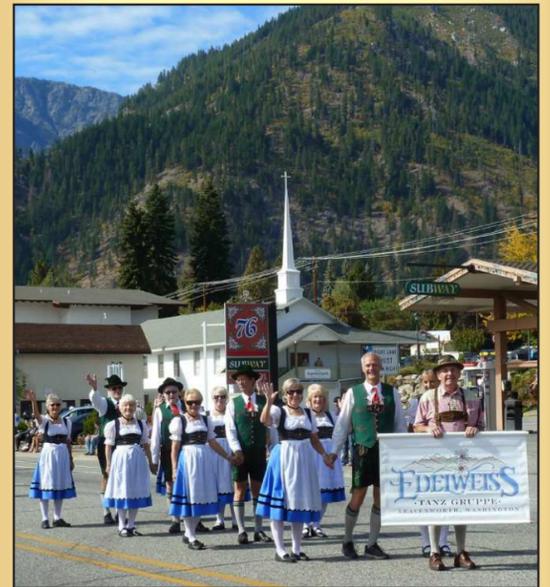

Photo submitted by Kirk Laird

Edelweiss Tanzgruppe, Leavenworth's home grown folk dance group, is gearing up for a new season. The group, which started nearly twenty years ago under the leadership of Wolf Noack, is beginning practices in June for performances at Autumn Leaf and Oktoberfest. The group has also performed in recent years in Portland and other cities. The group has space for several new dancers. As is customary, men are currently outnumbered and therefore are especially encouraged to show. Practices are Thursday evening at the Leavenworth Senior Center beginning June 15 with the next practice being July 6. Outfits, known as trachten in Bavaria, dirndls for the ladies and lederhosen for the men, are funded by Projekt Bayern. There are no fees to be a member of the group. Call Earl/Anita Petite at 509-670-0611 or Kirk Laird at 509-470-5271 for more information.

Opinion

Why is the stock market so resilient?

BRAD BLACKBURN
Financial Opinion

Despite the unimpressive economy and the drama engulfing the political world, the stock market is remarkably calm. But that's nothing new. Since the Financial Crisis, the markets have shrugged off a weak economy, the Fiscal Cliff, the Sequester, a government shutdown, multiple crises in Europe, and more... So why are the markets so resilient?

Let's examine the most recent stuff first. Clearly, part of the recent stock market optimism was the promise of deregulation and tax reform. However, given the turmoil in Donald Trump's presidency, the markets have reason to doubt that promise. So why isn't the stock market spooked? To answer that question, I'm going to quote myself from back in February:

"There is nothing the stock market would like more than for Mike Pence or Paul Ryan to take over as President tomorrow. If that happened, the markets would get all of the positive parts of Donald Trump – without all the childish ignorance."

However, as happy as the markets would be with a President Pence, there's a real risk of a long, drawn-out investigation that could slow the Republican agenda to a halt. The quicker all this can be resolved, the better. For now, it seems the stock market is betting on a quick outcome.

Beyond the political drama, the markets are also happy that Trump is playing nice with China and things are calming down politically in Europe. In addition, while the economy isn't booming, it is still growing, and the likelihood of a recession is low. Further, even if a recession comes, the Fed has proven it's willing to pull out all the stops to help the economy. In addition to all that, corporate earnings have been solid (which is what the markets care about most). So, despite all the scary stuff, there are plenty of excuses for the markets to continue rising.

However, I think there is something far more simple that is keeping the markets strong: Huge sums of money are flowing into the stock market every day. Consider how many more people are making monthly contributions to their 401k's and IRA's than they were 20 plus years ago. Because of that, there is a never-ending demand for stocks. If you remember economics 101, more demand means a higher price.

There's another important aspect to this, which is the rise of index funds. Index funds aren't managed, which means there's no one choosing when to buy or sell, or when to be excited or scared about the markets. With index funds, no one is making those decisions. Whether the economic and political news is good or bad, billions of dollars still flow into the stock market month after month after month. So, perhaps the markets keep rising because investors are asleep at the wheel.

I'm not sure what to make of this phenomenon. Today's stock market is different than anything in history. It makes me wonder if economic and political discussions are completely irrelevant. As long as investors keep pushing money into the markets relentlessly, the markets might rise relentlessly. Obviously, at some point, it has to stop; but the old rules seem to have changed, so I have no idea when.

History in a cornerstone

There is an interesting and romantic story in a cornerstone of the building now housing the Edelweiss Hotel and Cafe.

Until the exterior was covered over during its renovation in the 1960's any passer-by on Front Street could glance up and notice the large granite cornerstone at shoulder height beside the steps leading to the second floor. It bore the inscription:

"F. A. and Effie C. Losekamp, Erected 1906."

That cornerstone is an important part of the building's story.

Frank (F.A.) Losekamp came to the Icicle Valley with the Great Northern Railway surveyors. The son of German immigrants, he headed west as a young man, opening a store in a mining community in Montana.

In 1888 he fell in love with lovely Effie Head, whose parents were of French descent. They were married the same year.

As the Great Northern pushed its plans for a railroad route to the Coast, every settler on the Wenatchee River watched hopefully. (A railroad meant markets for crops, more settlers, towns, and the refinements of the city for their children).

Sensing a good business opportunity, Frank Losekamp came to the Wenatchee River, following its winding course into the Cascade foothills for twenty five miles. Here, in a tent along the Icicle, he set up his store. Later he erected a wooden building. Soon other enterprising businessmen clustered nearby.

When Frank applied for a post office, there were two saloons and a blacksmith shop in the little settlement of Icicle.

As the railroad built nearer, talk of a switchyard and roundhouse being located in the Icicle Valley drew the attention of land speculators. A switchyard and shops meant a town would spring up. Lots offered for sale meant quick money.

Incorporating, they purchased part of the Howell Ralston homestead and platted the town of Leavenworth at trackside across the Wenatchee River some distance from the spot Losekamp had chosen.

Realizing his store was so far from the new families moving to Leavenworth, Frank bought a lot in the infant town and moved his business there.

As the town grew, his general merchandise store earned a reputation for friendliness. The new comers bought groceries, clothing, farm implements and hardware items.

As Frank ordered more and more stock, his little store bulged at the seams. A new wing was added and then another. Finally the store looked like a mother hen with wings outspread over her brood.

Luckily, the wooden structure escaped the plague of fires that ate through so many early business places during the first twelve years. But the writing on the wall was plain: Frank Losekamp needed a fireproof building.

Before 1900, a road was opened to the mining town of Blewett. Prospectors from Blewett and the new claims in the Red Mountain region came into town and the Losekamp store for supplies.

Sheep men discovered a bananza in free summer pastures for their flocks in the mountains beyond Leavenworth. Each sheep camp meant a pack string to be outfitted at least once a week. Genial Frank Losekamp held a virtual monopoly on their business. The pioneer merchant prospered.

By 1904, Losekamp could afford to return some of his profits to the townsfolk who were his friends and customers. On Christmas morning, he hitched his team to a cutter and started to call on his friends. He greeted each family personally and delivered a lovely china plate to each house in town, giving away nearly 300 plates.

Frank Losekamp had a host of friends. He should have been happy. But the light of his life had gone out three years before when his wife, Effie, was laid to rest in the small cemetery west of town. Once he thought of moving. He did go to Las Vegas, Nevada, with the thought of living there, but he felt more alone there than ever.

Losekamp owned the first building on the townsite but it had grown too small even with add ons. He poses with friends before it moved so a new brick structure was built on Front & 9th.

In 1906 he set out to design a fitting memorial for his dead wife. He decided to move his original store (now the oldest wooden store in town) off the lot where it had stood for over a decade. In its place he would construct a handsome two-story brick block. This building would be his memorial to this wife.

Taking his idea to his friend, Charles Freytag, he asked him to draw the plans on paper. When they were complete, he brought the drawings to a builder named Moon.

"I want nothing more to do with it until you can turn the keys of the finished building over to me," Frank said to the contractor. In the meantime, his store was moved into Front Street where business went on as usual.

Frank Losekamp had only one request about the building. He ordered a fine cornerstone of polished granite from the quarry at Index, Washington. He wanted it set into the front in a prominent place about four feet from the ground, with a fitting ceremony.

When the basement was completed and the brick walls began to rise, his fellow Masons conducted a simple ceremony for the laying of the suitably engraved stone. As a crowd of town folks looked on, the cornerstone was laid in place. Not everyone who watched knew what Frank Losekamp knew.

The cornerstone housed a secret. Inside, he had placed several items belonging to Effie, including a purse, some coins, and a 1906 copy of the Leavenworth Echo. This was his final tribute to his gentle wife.

For some sixty years, Leavenworth were reminded of this pioneer merchant and his helpmate, Effie, by the inscription on the cornerstone.

Happy Trails

Last week, I had the opportunity to meet up with my daughter Rachel and fellow riders that have been riding the John Wayne Trail. This is an annual event that starts in Easton and ends at the Idaho border. The trip is 18 days long and attracts horse riders, teamsters, and mountain bikers from all over the United States and Canada. My daughter did half of the ride last year with Morey Grosse and this year she is riding the entire 365 miles. The group varies between 150 to 200 riders at anyone time. The terrain varies from green forest, sage brush and the wheat fields of the Palouse. I meet up with Rachel in Warden where they had a rest day and helped replenish supplies. This trip is not for the faint at heart, as you need to take just about everything you need with you at the start of the trip.

You need to have food and water for you and your horse. There are several places along the way that you can eat in a restaurant or buy food to prepare. Rachel is cooking on a camp stove. At Warden, we went into Moses Lake for dinner, laundry and a shower. I had prepared some meals ahead and took them over as well to use later.

Meeting up with this group was a great experience that I hope I can do again. The people, the camaraderie and the horses were awesome. In the short time, I was there I was impressed with the folks that do this trek through, wind, rain, heat and dust. It is very physically and mentally demanding but the riders are having a once in a life time experience, and creating memories and friendships they will cherish. I came home exhausted and I never even sat on a horse.

So this week I am sharing a recipe for you to prepare on your outdoor adventure. Enjoy!

Campfire Tacos

- 4 - 6 bags of corn chips or Doritos
- 1-2 cans good quality canned chili with beans
- 1 - cup shredded cheese
- 1 -cup shredded lettuce
- 1 tomato chopped
- 1 small can chopped olives
- Sour cream, taco sauce and chopped green onion if you like

Heat canned chilli, open the bag of corn chips and spoon in the chili, layer the other ingredients on top of the chili.

Serve in the bag and you will have no dishes to wash.

Adults love these as much as kids. Enjoy!

Q: How do I eat green while on warfarin?

Ask...

Dr. Louise

How to Eat Green Veggies Safely If You Are Taking Warfarin (Coumadin®)

1. You can have up to one serving per meal of green veggies. You can eat one serving at lunch and another at dinner, but no second helpings or "doubling up" (eating both a green salad and a green vegetable). If you have a green salad, don't eat a green vegetable, too. If you don't feel you are getting enough vegetables, mix up your veggie colors, such as broccoli with cauliflower ("Winter Mix"), or broccoli, cauliflower and carrots ("California Mix").

2. One serving of greens is one-half of a measuring cup of broccoli, Brussels sprouts or cooked spinach. One serving of salad is up to two cups of "fluffy" salad greens (before you put salad dressing on it), or what will fit comfortably in a cereal bowl.

3. When going on vacation or staying out of town, take note of how many servings of green veggies or salads you typically eat in a week, then match it while you are gone. This one tip will keep your INR much more stable when away from your usual routine and let you enjoy your time away from home.

4. Your blood thinner level will often decrease when you eat more green veggies, leaving you less protected against a stroke. Get your INR (blood test) checked within 1-2 weeks of starting to eat greens and don't be surprised if you require a higher dose of warfarin.

of Vitamin K than those who didn't, and showed how people with high body stores of Vitamin K had blood levels that stayed in range more consistently than people with low body stores of Vitamin K.

Last week I met Agnes, a lively 85-year old who had just moved to our community from California to be near her grandchildren. She had been taking warfarin for her heart valve replacement for nearly 10 years.

May and June is asparagus season here in the Yakima Valley, and Agnes mentioned how this was the hardest time of the year for her because she just loved asparagus.

"What's wrong with that?" I asked her.

"Oh, I wish I could eat asparagus, but since I've been on the warfarin I can't have any greens."

"Who told you that?"

"My doctor gave me a paper that listed all the foods that I'm not supposed to eat, because they have something called 'K' in them. He told me my blood thinner fights with green vegetables, so I can't have any. I'm not a fan of broccoli but I sure miss my salads. And I really miss eating asparagus," she sighed.

"If you could eat them, would you?"

"I'd love to! Most of my favorite vegetables are on that list of foods with 'K.'"

"Agnes, I've got good news for you. We don't tell people to avoid eating green vegetables any more, because eating them is so good for you. In fact, they're some of the healthiest foods you can eat! Eating green vegetables like broccoli and Brussels sprouts helps prevent stroke, cancer, heart attack, even Alzheimer's."

"Really? That's wonderful!"

Agnes is not the only one who thinks she has to avoid eating green vegetables because she takes warfarin. When I asked the dietitians at our local hospital which information they gave to people just starting warfarin, they were happy to share their patient information handouts with me. The very first sentence said: "You should either avoid the foods rich in Vitamin K listed below or eat exactly the same amounts of them every day." Most people read the part telling them to avoid eating greens and stop right there!

It's such a shame when people starting on warfarin get the message, "Now that you're taking this medicine, you can't ever eat green vegetables for the rest of your life."

Luckily, this is no longer the case. People can and should eat green veggies while taking warfarin, as long as they are reasonably consistent with how much and how often they have them.

I've been showing my patients how to eat green veggies safely while taking warfarin for over 15 years, and I've noticed that the ones who eat green veggies regularly actually do better than those who don't. When the people on warfarin who are eating green veggies come in for their blood test they are in range much more often, and as a result don't have to come in as often to be checked.

In fact, a recent study found that people eating green veggies have higher body stores
