LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Open letter of remembrance and thank you Chelan Valley Community

Dear Friends,

This Memorial Day Weekend, my wife Cathy and I are marking the 10th anniversary of the death of our daughter Lise Palmer and unborn granddaughter Faith. We want to extend our special and heartfelt thanks to the generous people of the Chelan Valley Community for their prayers and support over these past years.

On May 26, 2011, Lise, her husband, and two toddler boys joined us for a long awaited vacation in Chelan. The following morning, 29-year old Lise who was 31 weeks pregnant went out for a run on State Route 97A near the Best Western. A vehicle crossed the center line, the southbound lane and the shoulder striking the guardrail. It then struck Lise who was declared dead at the scene.

In the aftermath following this tragic event, our family has grown to be part of this wonderful community. We attend services at the Lake Chelan Lutheran church. Over the years, we contributed to the Chelan Public Library, partnered with the Historic Chelan Downtown Association on a memorial bench in the Woodin Avenue Landing Park, and worked with family and WSDOT on the placement of a marker sign on 97A.

Our family considered leaving Chelan following this tragic event.

However, our daughter loved it here so much she would have wanted us to stay. We accepted life's challenges and decided to remain here with your help. We want to especially thank Pastor Paul Polumbo, David Hellyer, Gary Sterner, Jerry Isenhardt, Tom Gormley, Erin McCardle, Kelly Allen, Jana Crawford, Bill Clark, Jerry Larsen, Dave Koenig, Jay Witherbee, Linda Farnsworth, and Michelle Lovato. We apologize if we left out others whose support we cherish.

Again, we thank the people of the Chelan Valley.

Sincerely,
Craig and Cathy Macadangdang

We love our PIGS!

SUBMITTED BY DENISE SOROM, DIRECTOR OF COMMUNITY PHILANTHROPY, COMMUNITY FOUNDATION OF NCW

Denise Sorom

Yes, pork is delicious, but we don't mean those pigs, we mean our Partners In Giving – a group of donors who make annual gifts to support the work of the Community Foundation. Our PIGs, as we affectionately call them, took shape in 2013 due to an unlikely event: being turned down for a major grant.

We had applied for a competitive grant from the MJ Murdock Charitable Trust to help us expand our staff. Our evaluator, who came and visited with us in person, was impressed by everything we did—our grantmaking, our capacity building workshops for nonprofits, and our scholarship program—except for one thing: He felt that we did not have enough people in the community that made annual, unrestricted gifts to support our work. (Our main source of operating income came from the management of the multitude of charitable funds that we steward.) He asked us how we would ever build up enough unrestricted funds to help us weather unforeseen challenges such as natural disasters, fluctuations in the stock market or a surge of unemployment.

After 2020 and the devastating wildfires of the past few years, we wonder: perhaps this man had a crystal ball?

While it was a let-down to be denied the grant, we took his criticism to heart and decided to launch the Partners In Giving program. We started by asking board members and former board members to donate as little as $50/year to become a "PIG." We found a mascot, an adorable stuffed plush pig named "Pardner," and started to promote the opportunity in our marketing materials and over social media. The campaign took off. People far and wide sent us gifts to become PIGs and our favorite day was when 9-year-old Carly Everson dropped by with money she had saved up in her piggy bank.

Almost 200 individuals and businesses have signed on to become PIGs since 2013, generating over $300,000 in unrestricted funding for the Community Foundation! Our PIGs have paid for dozens of critically important projects since this time:

- Every year our PIGs "round up" our scholarship awards giving students an extra boost in their financial support and last year, we surprised our most financially needy scholarship recipients with new iPads to help them get a leg up on their college career.
- PIGs have supplemented our budget for grant making, allowing us to award more grants when nonprofits really needed our help.
- About every 2 to 3 years, our PIGs help us pay for special training opportunities for our nonprofit leaders such as peer to peer coaching for leadership development or workshops with nationally known fundraising experts such as Susan Howlett.
- PIGs have helped us transform our space, improving our conference rooms with new technology that we offer free of charge to nonprofits in our region.
- Perhaps most impressively, PIG funds helped us launch GiveNCW in 2015 – a crowd-funding campaign that now raises several hundred thousand dollars a year for dozens of nonprofits each year.

In 2021, our PIGs will be providing an opportunity for nonprofits to receive customized strategic consulting, ensuring that our most valued charitable organizations survive the challenge of the COVID era and continue to serve this community for years to come.

Our work without our PIGs would be like a BLT without the bacon. They make everything that much better. To learn more, visit www.cfncw.org/PIG.

Main Inflation Pressure Hasn't Come Yet, Experts Say

PETR SVAB

News Analysis

The recent uptick in inflation is no cause for panic, although there could be more to come, particularly if the government or the Federal Reserve overreacts, several experts told The Epoch Times.

The Consumer Price Index (CPI), a proxy for inflation, rose 4.2 percent year-over-year in April—the highest figure reported by the Bureau of Labor Statistics since the Great Recession of 2008. Fed officials expressed surprise at the uptick, but also announced that higher inflation will be tolerated for some time.

I'm almost worried more about the government trying to hyperstimulate the economy because they want growth to get back to the previous trendline.

Ryan Young, senior fellow, Competitive Enterprise Institute

The increase actually isn't as dramatic as it seems, the experts said. They indicated that the spike reflects the recovery from the economic downturn and government restrictions triggered by the COVID-19 pandemic. Indeed, if one compares the April CPI with the pre-pandemic figure from February 2020 and adjusts for seasonal changes, the increase adds up to about 3.1 percent.

That, however, still represents an acceleration from the previous trend of less than 2 percent growth.

Part of that increase stems from the money the Fed printed to fund multiple economic stimulus packages and various measures to shore up financial markets, according to Norbert Michel, an expert on financial markets and monetary policy and director of the Center for Data Analysis at the conservative Heritage Foundation.

Usually, when the government borrows money, it's backed by Treasury securities bought with existing dollars by individuals, companies, and governments.

This time, however, a major share of the $5.6 trillion in COVID-related government spending was funded through securities bought by the Fed with brand new dollars. The Fed now holds more than $5 trillion in U.S. debt, up from some $2.5 trillion in February 2020.

The result is that Americans and their businesses still have some money to spend and cover their bills, despite the economy severely contracting and still lagging behind its February high. If demand outpaces what the economy can currently supply, the buying pressure will bid up prices.

Some of that has likely happened already, Michel said, but "it's clear there's a lot left."

"You see a very big increase in personal disposable income, even on a per capita basis. So far, a lot of that money has been saved because you have this drop-off in demand, so there is a concern as to what happens as the recovery takes off," he said.

That hasn't happened yet, and it would be an overreaction on the Fed's part to try to tighten the money supply, he stated.

"It's possible that this is a beginning of an upward trend, but we're not going to know that for a little while yet, for at least another six months," he added.

The problem may lie in the opposite extreme, according to Ryan Young, senior fellow at the pro-free market Competitive Enterprise Institute.

"I'm almost worried more about the government trying to hyperstimulate the economy because they want growth to get back to the previous trendline and the way politicians work is that would mean more spending, more stimulus, more infrastructure, more debt, more deficit," he said.

"These are not sustainable strategies and supposing they do induce a boom, the trade-off for that is there's going to be a bust later, leaving us no better off than before."

The Biden administration's $2 trillion infrastructure plan seems to push in that direction. It would certainly give banks something profitable to sink their excess reserves in, as the risk of such projects would be essentially carried by taxpayers, even if through an eventual bailout, as some other experts have previously said.

But such projects normally take years to take off and run the risk of merely displacing other private projects, since the skilled labor pool is limited, yet another expert has noted.

In the meantime, the Fed's solution to the liquidity glut has been to essentially print more dollars to pay banks to hold money they would otherwise lend. That just kicks the can down the road, Michel said.

"You're talking about the Fed having to pay literally hundreds of billions of dollars

... easily $200 billion a year to large financial institutions to hold on to their reserves," he said. "That's not politically sustainable in an environment where inflation is taking off."

The ideal situation would be for banks to return to financing projects organically emerging in the economy, Michel and Young agreed.

Rather than expanding or tightening, the economy needs relaxing, they said. Obstacles, such as burdensome regulations, need to be removed so that people can more easily come up with productive ideas and pitch them for financing.

"You know what you're good at and I know what I'm good at a lot better than Congress does," Young said. "And I think, writ large, that would be the best approach to get the economy completely back on track."

Furthermore, the Fed should let go of its dual mandate of "full employment" and 2 percent inflation and simply focus on keeping the money supply roughly in line with the economic growth with inflation around zero or perhaps gently fluctuating both above and below zero, Michel and Young said.

The argument that people need to feel the constant whip of inflation on their backs to do something productive with their money is misplaced, Michel stated.

"People are going to always look for productive things to do, try to buy the things they need, invest in the things they need," he said.

Wisconsin Nov. 3 Election Will Be Investigated by Retired Officers: Assembly Speaker

JACK PHILLIPS

Wisconsin state Assembly Speaker Robin Vos says he's hiring retired police officers to probe aspects of the 2020 presidential election, joining efforts in Republican-led states to look into the contest.

Vos, a Republican, told local news outlets that he will hire three retired officers to work with an Assembly committee that has investigatory powers to review the election. Vos said there were thousands of complaints made after the Nov. 3 contest in Wisconsin—which was narrowly won by President Joe Biden—that need to be investigated.

"We need to have a fact basis to continue to show the public in Wisconsin that, number one, we continue to take these irregularities seriously, and that at the end of the day, the laws that we proposed are based on facts in addition to anecdotes," Vos told the Wisconsin State Journal, adding that he believes Biden won the election but pointed to "irregularities" in how it was carried out.

In the interview, Vos singled out how the Center for Tech and Civic Life, which is mostly funded by Facebook's Mark Zuckerberg, got involved in several cities. Wisconsin's five largest cities received some $6.3 million from the group, which also provided funding to about 200 municipalities across the state, the Journal Sentinel reported.

The retired officers and committee will spend three months reviewing all the tips that were received and will focus more time on the most credible ones, Vos told the newspaper.

"Is there a whole lot of smoke or is there actual fire? We just don't know yet," he said. "A sizable chunk of people believe the election was illegitimate. And democracy cannot flourish if both sides don't believe in the end both sides had a fair shot."

The move comes as auditors who were approved by the Arizona GOP-led Senate are reviewing more than 2 million ballots in Maricopa County, and amid other similar efforts across the United States. Last week, a judge in Georgia ruled to unseal absentee ballots that were cast in Fulton County during the 2020 election for a review.

Vos noted the controversy surrounding the Maricopa audit and said he wanted to prevent a similar situation from unfolding in Wisconsin. That's why, he said, he hired former law enforcement officials.

"My hope is that they come back and they build the case to show Gov. [Tony] Evers and the Democrats who are in the 'Casablanca' mode—'Nothing to see here,' 'everything's fine,' 'they just want to suppress the vote.' No. These are professional investigators," Vos told the Sentinel.

Since the election is over, Vos said there's no way to overturn the results in favor of former President Donald Trump.

"The election's already over," he said. "My job is to be frustrated with the result, which I am, especially with what's going on in Washington, D.C. ... My job is to say where are the laws being followed, where are they not? If they're not being followed, how can I fix it?"

Ann Jacobs, a Democrat who heads the Wisconsin Elections

Commission, told the paper she's concerned about Vos's investigation.

"I think it's unfortunate that the Legislature is using its resources to investigate what has already been thoroughly investigated, and it is my hope that instead they could work toward expanding opportunities and ease of voting for Wisconsin voters," she said.

The Elections Commission didn't immediately respond to a request by The Epoch Times for comment.

Republicans Call for Fauci to Be Fired Over Wuhan Lab Controversy

TOM OZIMEK

Republican lawmakers have intensified their calls for Dr. Anthony Fauci to be fired after he defended the flow of $600,000 from the National Institutes of Health (NIH) to the Wuhan Institute of Virology in China, the lab at the heart of the controversy over the still-unexplained origins of the CCP (Chinese Communist Party) virus.

Fauci, director of the NIH, said in testimony before the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Health and Human Services on May 25 that it would've been "almost a dereliction of our duty" for the NIH not to collaborate with Chinese scientists to study how the virus might jump from animals to humans.

He insisted that the NIH didn't fund so-called gain-of-function research, which he defined as "taking a virus that could infect humans and making it either more transmissible and/or pathogenic to humans," at the Wuhan lab, claiming that the purpose of the $600,000 grant "was to study the animal-human interface, to do surveillance, and to determine if these bat viruses were even capable of transmitting infection to humans."

Fauci was further pressed about the matter during a Senate hearing on May 26, with Sen. John Kennedy (R-La.) questioning Fauci's faith in the Wuhan lab's scientists, whom Fauci had called "very respectable" just one day prior. "How do you know they didn't lie to you and use the money for gain-of-function research anyway?" Kennedy asked Fauci.

Fauci acknowledged he couldn't be certain whether the money was used against its intended purpose.

"You never know," he said. Following Fauci's remarks, Rep. Warren Davidson (R-Ohio) called for his removal. In an appearance on "Fox and Friends" on May 27, Davidson accused Fauci of providing "cover for China" amid Beijing's resistance to a transparent probe into the origins of the outbreak.

"People like Dr. Fauci have provided cover for them. The World Health Organization [is] providing cover for them.

People like Dr. Fauci have provided cover for [China]. The World Health Organization [is] providing cover for them.

Rep. Warren Davidson

And very shockingly, many of our fellow countrymen have provided cover for China. They'd rather blame Republicans or Donald Trump. And that's why political science should not be able to trump science. And Dr. Fauci has led that charge. He needs to be fired," he said.

Davidson had earlier introduced the Fauci Incompetence Requires Early Dismissal (FIRED) Act, which sets a 12-year term limit for appointees serving in the capacity of the director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, a post Fauci has held since 1984.

Another Republican lawmaker who has called for Fauci's dismissal, Rep. Guy Reschenthaler (R-Pa.), told "Fox and Friends" on May 27 that he believes Fauci "is either grossly incompetent or he's been lying to the American people," and that he "should be fired or resign."

Reschenthaler argued that Fauci misled the public in the early stages of the pandemic with regard to mask guidance.

"Right now in the United States, people should not be walking around with masks," Fauci said in March 2020.

He later clarified that he meant that masks should be prioritized for health workers, but Reschenthaler insisted that Fauci had lied.

"He blatantly lied to Congress about masks and the American people, saying they don't help, and then he said, 'Oh no, I was lying so we could hoard [personal protective equipment]," Reschenthaler said.

The Pennsylvania Republican also objected to Fauci initially dismissing the theory that the CCP virus had originated in and escaped from the Wuhan lab.

In May 2020, Fauci largely dismissed the lab leak theory, telling National Geographic, "If you look at the evolution of the virus in bats and what's out there now, [the scientific evidence] is very, very strongly leaning toward this could not have been artificially or deliberately manipulated."

Recently, Fauci said he's no longer certain that COVID-19 developed naturally, and called for an open investigation into the origins of the virus.

"I am not convinced about that. I think we should continue to investigate what went on in China until we continue to find out to the best of our ability what happened," Fauci said at a fact-checking symposium on May 11.

"Certainly, the people who investigated it say it likely was the emergence from an animal reservoir that then infected individuals, but it could have been something else, and we need to find that out. That's the reason why I said I'm perfectly in favor of any investigation that looks into the origin of the virus."

The Wuhan facility, home of China's only P4 lab—a class of laboratory with the highest level of biosecurity where research on the world's most dangerous diseases are conducted—has been in the spotlight amid concerns that the CCP virus may have originated there, rather than by making a natural jump from bats to humans.

Republican members of the House Intelligence Committee argued in a May 19 report that it's more likely the virus escaped from the lab.

The CCP has denied any link between the virus's origin and the Wuhan lab and has pushed a "natural zoonotic" hypothesis—that the virus was transmitted to humans from an animal host. However, Beijing has so far failed to identify the original animal species that allegedly passed the virus on to humans.

A report from the World Health Organization (WHO) published in March stated that the CCP virus likely spread to people through an unknown animal, but WHO Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus said the mission to study the origin of the virus didn't adequately analyze other theories.

"As far as WHO is concerned, all hypotheses remain on the table ... We have not yet found the source of the virus," Ghebreyesus said.

On May 25, the United States urged the WHO to launch a fresh probe into the source of the CCP virus, highlighting the need for transparency.

"Phase 2 of the COVID origins study must be launched with terms of reference that are transparent, science-based, and give international experts the independence to fully assess the source of the virus and the early days of the outbreak," said Health and Human Services Secretary Xavier Becerra in remarks to the 74th World Health Assembly.

More than a dozen nations, including the United States and the European Union, have raised concerns about the phase one WHO study into the origin of the virus, pointing to the report's significant delay and China's refusal to share crucial raw data.

President Joe Biden announced on May 26 that he has ordered a closer intelligence review of what he characterized as two equally plausible scenarios of the origins of the CCP virus—one natural, the other a lab leak.

Lily Zhou contributed to this report.

Georgia Judge Postpones Ballot Examination After County Files Motion to Dismiss

ZACHARY STIEBER

A judge in Georgia told parties in an election integrity case on May 27 that a previously scheduled meeting at a ballot storage warehouse was canceled after officials filed a flurry of motions in the case.

Henry County Superior Court Judge Brian Amero said a May 28 meeting was no longer taking place because of motions filed by Fulton County, the county's Board of Registration and Elections, and the county's clerk of Superior and Magistrate Courts, a spokesperson for the court confirmed to The Epoch Times.

Amero said the motions must be heard before the plaintiffs can gain access to the absentee ballots. He proposed a June 21 hearing, but the order scheduling the hearing hasn't yet been filed.

"It seems like a desperation move. The silver lining is that we now have more time to perfect the changes we had to make in our inspection plan," Garland Favorito, the lead petitioner, told The Epoch Times via email.

County officials argued that the complaint filed by voters should be dismissed because the petitioners failed to serve, or even attempt to serve, the county. They also said Fulton County doesn't have final control over elections, that petitioners aren't entitled to declaratory judgment, and that petitioners haven't complied with election contest requirements.

Amero heard in a hearing last week that petitioners weren't able to properly examine ballot images they've received because of their low resolution—200 dots per inch (DPI). Amero granted the petitioners' request to unseal the mailed ballots and said they could go to where they were stored in order to observe county workers create higher resolution images of the ballots.

Amero mentioned during the hearing that no parties had filed a motion to dismiss, allowing petitioners to obtain some discovery.

During the hearing, lawyers for the county urged the judge not to grant access to the ballots.

Before the latest update in the case, some officials had supported the ballot examination.

Georgia Secretary of State Brad Raffensperger, a Republican, opposed letting petitioners get access to the ballots, but said he supported Amero's ruling.

"From day one, I have encouraged Georgians with concerns about the election in their counties to pursue those claims through legal avenues. Fulton County has a long standing history of election mismanagement that has understandably weakened voters' faith in its system. Allowing this audit provides another layer of transparency and citizen engagement," he told The Epoch Times in an email.

Fulton County workers count absentee ballots in Atlanta on Nov. 6, 2020.

However, Democrat Fulton County Commission Chairman Robb Pitts criticized the attempt to examine the ballots.

"It is outrageous that Fulton County continues to be a target of those who cannot accept the results from last year's election," he told news outlets in a statement.

Sugar substitutes - there are two types

Last week, one of my subscribers asked me, "What is the best sugar substitute to use since I am a diabetic?"

Unfortunately, the answer to that is not very clear.

There are two types of sweeteners: caloric sweeteners (CS) and non-caloric sweeteners (NCS). The five most common caloric sweeteners listed on food labels are corn syrup, sorghum, cane sugar, high fructose corn syrup, and fruit juice concentrate. One study done during 2005 and 2009 and found that 53% of baby food formulas, 75% of salad dressings and dips, and 78% of vegetable juices contained at least one added caloric sweetener.

Back in 2005, 1% of foods and beverages contained non-caloric sweeteners. Between 2005 and 2009, Americans chose more foods and drinks containing NCS instead of caloric sweeteners every year. That trend has continued ever since.

Non-caloric sweeteners (NCS) have been used for decades as food additives and are considered safe.

Although they don't contain calories like common sweeteners, non-caloric sweeteners have NOT been shown to encourage weight loss or improve blood sugar control in people with diabetes.

Shouldn't a sweetener without any calories help you lose weight? Why doesn't it help lower your blood sugar level if you add a sweetener without any calories to your beverages instead of some form of sugar?

Research published in the October 2014 issue of Nature magazine may explain this observation. Samples of 4 different sweeteners were given to mice: sugar or one of three commonly used non-caloric sweeteners: aspartame, saccharin, and sucralose. The mice given the NCS showed changes in the makeup of their intestinal bacteria, while sugar had no effect.

Then, the mice whose intestinal bacteria had shown changes handled the food they ate differently. They had higher blood sugars after eating, and their blood sugars took much longer to drop back to normal levels. This pattern closely matches glucose intolerance, which is associated with an increased risk of becoming diabetic.

When researchers introduced samples of the changed mice's gut bacteria into normal mice, the normal mice's gut bacteria changed. And when it did, the same pattern of higher blood sugars that mimicked glucose intolerance occurred.

Repeating the same experiment on a small group of humans, only a few people showed changes in their gut bacteria after using a sugar substitute. However, the people whose gut bacteria changed showed the same pattern of glucose intolerance as the affected mice.

The effect of non-caloric sweeteners on gut bacteria doesn't happen consistently in humans. However, it could explain why switching from using sugar to an artificial sweetener doesn't always help diabetics lose weight or control their blood sugar levels.

Two other sugar substitutes are also available, both derived from natural sources. Stevia is a calorie-free sweetener from a plant native to South America in the chrysanthemum family and related to the ragweed plant. Stevia was approved for use as a food additive in 2008 and is marketed as the sweetener Truvia®.

Xylitol is a low-calorie sweetener extracted from natural sources such as corn. Because of its protective effect on tooth enamel, xylitol is added to sugarless gum and mints. It is marketed as a sugar substitute for baking. Xylitol may be a dentist's friend, but it's a dog owner's nightmare.

Xylitol is safe for humans but deadly to dogs. Xylitol triggers a dog's pancreas to pump out lots of insulin, dropping their blood sugar to dangerous levels. This triggers seizures and causes liver damage, even liver failure. Unfortunately, even small amounts of xylitol can kill a dog.

According to Jason Fung, MD, author of the books The Obesity Code and The Diabetes Code, the real obstacle to weight loss isn't too many calories. Instead, it's from insulin resistance caused by too much insulin released into the bloodstream.

We know caloric sweeteners like sucrose, fructose, agave, and honey will raise blood sugar. The increase in your blood sugar level triggers a burst of insulin from your pancreas, designed to lower your blood sugar back to normal.

Even though non-caloric or very low caloric sweeteners like Stevia don't raise your blood sugar, they still trigger insulin release. In addition, some can trigger your pancreas to release MORE insulin than caloric sweeteners like sugar or honey. Instead of losing weight, the increased insulin release can interfere with your weight loss efforts.

There isn't any sweetener that is clearly better than any other. Unfortunately, using a non-caloric or low-caloric sweetener doesn't guarantee you'll lose weight or control your blood sugar. You can try them out, but the less you use, the better.
