Apple Days packed with family fun

BY BILL FORHAN

The Cashmere Museum and Pioneer Village annual Apple Days event is this weekend and offers some new events as well at the traditional activities.

There will be the traditional shootouts, sarsaparilla and honkytonk piano in the saloon. Gold panning, pony rides and children's activities will keep the young at heart busy all day.

New this year will be an evening concert by Hank Cramer on Saturday evening. The concert is for adults only since adult beverages will be available. There is a cover charge of $10 per person, which includes a picnic pack from the Cheesemonger's shop. The museum says dress warm, bring a lawn chair or blanket and enjoy the delightful mix of Hank Cramer's Celtic, Country and Western music.

The Wanapum Native American Discovery Unit from the Wanapum Heritage center will be on site and open to visitors. The WNADU is a 38 foot customized motor home with exhibits about the Wanapum way of life. It is a miniature version of the Priest Rapids Wanapum Village.

The Blacksmith Demonstration is also new this year.

The Archery demonstration by local archery expert Tom Baldwin will include an opportunity for individuals to learn to safely draw and shoot a bow.

Old favorites will also be putting on a show including the Wenatchee Youth Circus, Mariachi Huenachi, the shootists, gold panning, and Apple Pie auction!

Last year the museum had 23 apple pies in their apple pie contest. They are hoping for an increase this year. So, if you have a favorite apple pie recipe it's time to bake it up and take it down to the museum

Calling all Scarecrow hunters

SUBMITTED BY THE CASHMERE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Each year over 100 scarecrows are displayed, enlivening the Downtown area and drawing visitors from around the region to take a stroll through town capturing photos, discovering the Cashmere community and enjoying the scenery as the creations are on display. This year the town is back at it for the 7th Annual Scarecrow tour known as Scare-Crazy in Cashmere!

Beginning Oct. 1, self-guided scarecrow maps are available at the chamber office at 103 Cottage Avenue and participating businesses. Visit facebook.com/scarecrazycashmere or cashmerechamber.org for a digital copy.

Enter the Grand Prize Giveaway by completing the map tour. Select scarecrows will be assigned a scarecrow badge, locate and record on your map. Turn in completed forms by Oct. 31. The Grand Prize Giveaway is comprised of items donated by participating businesses and will be on display at the Chamber. Winner will be randomly selected on Nov. 1.

Scarecrows will be judged at an undisclosed date and time with awards given for the Grand Champion, Most Creative, Best Ensemble and Best Business Theme. Fans can participate by nominating People's Choice award by viewing the "Scare-Crazy in Cashmere" Facebook page and voting for their favorite.

Winners will be announced on Oct. 16.

Bring the whole family and spend the day in Cashmere enjoying the creativities of our locals as scarecrows fill our sidewalks, storefronts and neighborhoods. The ambience will leave you sharing with your friends that Cashmere has gone Scare-Crazy!

on Friday afternoon. You might just become this year's champion pie maker.

THE WASHINGTON OUTDOORS REPORT

The Big Game Hunting Forecast

By John Kruse

As we roll into October big game hunters across the Evergreen State are preparing for the modern firearm season for deer and elk. While many people think October and November are the only months to go after these animals there have been archery opportunities for both this September along with a high buck hunt for hunters using their weapon of choice in high country wilderness areas and a muzzleloader season that opens September 28th in select portions of the state.

Despite that, the vast majority of hunters who go after big game do so starting October 12th, the general opener for deer. Elk hunters get their shot starting October 26th in Eastern Washington and November 2nd in Western Washington.

How is this year's hunting season going to be? Weather always plays a big part but a wet September was kind to archery hunters and the longrange forecast for a cool and wet fall will also be helpful. The other part of the equation are the numbers of deer and elk available this year. That's why we checked in with the Washington Department of Fish and Wildlife to get an idea of how this fall's hunting season is shaping up.

ELK:

Brock Hoenes, the Deer and Elk section manager for WDFW, says Roosevelt elk in Western Washington are doing well with the exception of the Mt. St. Helens herd which has been affected by hoof disease. That, along with winter weather, have caused a decrease in the size of this particular herd. As for where to go, Hoenes suggests targeting the Willapa elk herd in SW Washington, a large herd with some 8,000 to 10,000 animals. Hunter access is plentiful on public lands and on private timber lands though permits are required to hunt these latter properties. The Olympic elk herd in and around Olympic National Park is a good herd to target too, especially if you are after a bigger bull. That's because many mature bulls spend summers in Olympic National Park but as winter conditions begin to set in, they head to game management units west of the park where hunters can get at them.

East of the Cascade crest Rocky Mountain Elk populations have seen declines in the Blue Mountain, Colockum and Yakima herds. This is due to harsh winter conditions in recent years and increased anterless opportunities in past hunting seasons. Because of this, less cow elk permits and mature bull permits are being issued in Central and SE Washington. Hoenes believes these measures and a mild winter should allow all of these herds to increase calf production and get back to where they should be number wise.

More of a wild card is in the Northeast part of the state where survey management is not as thorough since the size of the elk herds here are smaller. Having said that, Hoenes says it appears through anecdotal evidence that populations are stable, survival rates for adults are high and local hunters who know where the elk are spending time should do well.

DEER

According to Brock Hoenes, blacktailed deer are doing great with large, robust populations. White-tailed deer populations are still doing relatively well in NE Washington but harvest has declined since 2015 and no doe tags are being issued this year in hopes of increasing numbers and opportunity for 2020. Mule deer are doing well though the largest herd in the state in Okanogan County is still at lower than average levels. This is due to a double whammy of events, the harsh winter of 2016 and the huge Carlton Complex fire of 2015. There is an upside to the reduced number of mule deer in this area though because those major wildfires have reduced the winter range available for these animals and they would not support the numbers of deer seen prior to 2015.

As to where to go hunting this fall, Hoenes continues to recommend NE Washington for white-tailed deer, Chelan and Okanogan Counties for mule deer and timber company lands in Western Washington for blacktailed deer.

Lifestyle-related Breast Cancer Risk Factors

INFORMATION COURTESY OF AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY

A risk factor is anything that affects your chance of getting a disease, such as breast cancer. But having a risk factor, or even many, does not mean that you are sure to get the disease.

Certain breast cancer risk factors are related to personal behaviors, such as diet and exercise. Other lifestyle-related risk factors include decisions about having children and taking medicines that contain hormones.

Drinking alcohol is clearly linked to an increased risk of breast cancer. The risk increases with your ovaries make most of your estrogen, and fat tissue makes only a small amount. After menopause (when the ovaries stop making estrogen), most of a woman's estrogen comes from fat tissue. Having more fat tissue after menopause can raise estrogen levels and increase your chance of getting breast cancer. Also, women who are overweight tend to have higher blood insulin levels. Higher insulin levels have been linked to some cancers, including breast cancer.

Still, the link between weight and breast cancer risk is complex. For instance, risk appears to be increased for women who gained weight as an adult, but may not Evidence is growing that regular physical activity reduces breast cancer risk, especially in women past menopause. The main question is how much activity is needed. Some studies have found that even as little as a couple of hours a week might be helpful, although more seems to be better.

Exactly how physical activity might reduce breast cancer risk isn't clear, but it may be due to its effects on body weight, inflammation, hormones, and energy balance.

The American Cancer Society recommends that adults get at least 150 minutes of moderate intensity or 75 minutes of vigorous the amount of alcohol consumed. Compared with non-drinkers. women who have 1 alcoholic drink a day have a very small increase in risk. Those who have 2 to 3 drinks a day have about a 20% higher risk compared to women who don't drink alcohol. Excessive alcohol consumption is known to increase the risk of other cancers, too.

The American Cancer Society recommends that women who drink have no more than 1 drink a day.

Being overweight or obese after menopause increases breast cancer risk. Before menopause be increased among those who have been overweight since childhood. Also, excess fat in the waist area may affect risk more than the same amount of fat in the hips and thighs. Researchers believe that fat cells in various parts of the body have subtle differences that may explain this.

Weight might also have different effects on different types of breast cancer. For example, some research suggests that being overweight before menopause might increase your risk of triple-negative breast cancer.

Not being physically active, intensity activity each week (or a combination of these), preferably spread throughout the week.

Women who have not had children or who had their first child after age 30 have a slightly higher breast cancer risk overall. Having many pregnancies and becoming pregnant at an early age reduces breast cancer risk. Still, the effect of pregnancy seems to be different for different types of breast cancer. For a certain type of breast cancer known as triple-negative, pregnancy seems to increase risk.

Some studies suggest that breastfeeding may slightly lower breast cancer risk, especially if it's continued for 11/2 to 2 years. But this has been hard to study, especially in countries like the United States, where breastfeeding for this long is uncommon.

The explanation for this possible effect may be that breastfeeding reduces a woman's total number of lifetime menstrual cycles (the same as starting menstrual periods at a later age or going through early menopause).

Some birth control methods use hormones, which might increase breast cancer risk.

Oral contraceptives: Most studies have found that women using oral contraceptives (birth control pills) have a slightly higher risk of breast cancer than women who have never used them. Once the pills are stopped, this risk seems to go back to normal over time. Women who stopped using oral contraceptives more than 10 years ago do not appear to have any increased breast cancer risk.

Birth control shot: Depo-Provera is an injectable form of progesterone that's given once every 3 months for birth control. Some studies have found that women currently using birth-control shots seem to have an increase in breast cancer risk, but it appears that there is no increased risk in women 5 years after they stop getting the shots.

Birth control implants, intrauterine devices (IUDs), skin patches, vaginal rings: These forms of birth control also use hormones, which in theory could fuel breast cancer

Breast Cancer Awareness Month

October Means "Think Pink"

BY MARLENE FARRELL

October, Breast Cancer Awareness Month, is upon us, and it's time to "Think Pink!"

Early detection of breast cancer saves lives. Period. Now, with 3D mammography at Cascade Medical, screenings are state-of-the-art.

For uninsured or underinsured, the cost is a barrier to this important preventive check.

Think Pink's campaign raises money, through a partnership between Cascade Medical Foundation, Cascade Medical and local businesses, entirely for free mammograms for those without coverage.

Local businesses are taking the lead. They are proudly displaying the bright pink posters, and each business has tailored its contribution.

How about a bar of spiced apple pear soap from the Bubblery, or a growler fill at The Broken Barrel? Whistlepunk Ice Cream, Happy Happy Fudge and Schocolat will each have pink-themed treats.

Look for fun events to support this great cause - at Beyoutiful Hot Yoga, Wildflour, Bushel & Bee Taproom and Icicle Creek Center for the Arts.

Business owner, Becky Driscoll, explained what Think Pink means to her, "At the Broken Barrel, we give with the intention of positively impacting our local community.

Now in our 3rd year of business, we have found that the Think Pink efforts to offer FREE mammograms to women who live in Leavenworth makes a difference their lives."

Shawna Lassen, owner of The Bubblery, talked about how Think Pink began.

"We implemented this with the purpose of helping every woman in our community have access to good preventative health care. I am happy this program is available now, and I'm grateful to Cascade Medical for making this possible."

Locals and visitors alike can show their support of Think Pink by patronizing these businesses partners:

The Bubblery, The Broken Barrel, Beyoutiful Hot Yoga, Posy Handpicked Goods, Bushel & Bee Taproom, Village Alps, Happy Happy Fudge, Whistlepunk Ice Cream Co., Schocolat, Benchmark Jewelers, The Cheesemonger's Shop, Icicle Creek Center for the Arts, Wildflour.

One person touched powerfully by Think Pink in 2017 was local Connie Dunn.

"I hadn't gotten a mammogram in years," Dunn said. "[In 2017] I was shopping at Plain Market, and I saw a flyer advertising 'Free mammograms' for uninsured women.' I brought it home and set it on the counter.

"I was about to go to Mexico on a vacation for my 60th birthday, and I saw the flyer again as I cleaned up the counter. I was about to crumple it up, and thought, "Why not?" I live in Plain, so the convenience of getting a mammogram in town was huge for me. I called and got in that day. I never thought a thing was wrong with me.

Cascade Medical Mammographer Holly Blue adjusts the 3-D Mammogram machine settings for the next patient.

"When I returned from vacation, I had a voice message. I had to go in for more testing – another mammogram, an ultrasound and eventually a biopsy. They found early stage-one breast cancer. It all happened so fast. I got the call just before Thanksgiving, and went in for surgery on December 11th, followed by radiation. It went really well, but it was still a journey. "I think the moral of the story is:

Ladies, don't put it off." Since the inception of 3D mammography, Cascade Medical has performed 230 mammograms, a 15% increase over the previous year. Thus, the word is getting out about the benefits of 3D mammography.

More information about Think Pink can be found at www.cascademedicalfoundation.org and also on Cascade Medical Foundation's Facebook page.

Lifestyle-related Breast Cancer Risk Factors

growth. Some studies have shown a link between use of hormonereleasing IUDs and breast cancer risk, but few studies have looked at the use of birth control implants, patches, and rings and breast cancer risk

When thinking about using hormonal birth control, women should discuss their other risk factors for breast cancer with their health care provider.

Hormone therapy with estrogen (often combined with progesterone) has been used for many years to help relieve symptoms of menopause and help prevent osteoporosis (thinning of the bones). This treatment goes by many names, such as post-menopausal hormone therapy (PHT), hormone replacement therapy (HRT), and menopausal hormone therapy (MHT).

There are 2 main types of hormone therapy. For women who still have a uterus (womb), doctors generally prescribe estrogen and progesterone (known as combined hormone therapy or HT). Progesterone is needed because estrogen alone can increase the risk of cancer of the uterus. For women who've had a hysterectomy (who no longer have a uterus), estrogen alone can be used. This is known as estrogen replacement therapy (ERT) or just estrogen therapy (ET) Combined hormone therapy (HT): Use of combined hormone therapy after menopause increases the risk of breast cancer. It may also increase the chances of dying from breast cancer. This increase in risk can be seen with as little as 2 years of use. Combined HT also increases the likelihood that the cancer may be found at a more advanced stage.

The increased risk from combined HT appears to apply only to current and recent users. A woman's breast cancer risk seems to return to that of the general population within 5 years of stopping treatment.

Bioidentical hormone therapy: The word bioidentical is sometimes used to describe versions of estrogen and progesterone with the same chemical structure as those found naturally in people. The use of these hormones has been marketed as a safe way or visit our Facebook page for appointments.

Please call 509-699-0872

133 Cottage Ave. | Cashmere

to treat the symptoms of menopause. But because there aren't many studies comparing "bioidentical" or "natural" hormones to synthetic versions of hormones, there's no proof that they're safer or more effective. More studies are needed to know for sure. The use of these bioidentical hormones should be considered to have the same health risks as any other type of hormone therapy.

Estrogen therapy (ET): The use of estrogen alone after menopause does not seem to increase the risk of breast cancer much, if at all. But when used long term (for more than 15 years), ET has been found to increase the risk of ovarian and breast cancer in some studies.

At this time there aren't many strong reasons to use post-menopausal hormone therapy (either combined HT or ET), other than possibly for the short-term relief of menopausal symptoms.

Along with the increased risk of breast cancer, combined HT also appears to increase the risk of heart disease, blood clots, and strokes.

It does lower the risk of colorectal cancer and osteoporosis, but this must be weighed against the possible harms, especially since there are other ways to prevent and treat osteoporosis, and screening can sometimes prevent colon cancer.

ET does not seem to increase breast cancer risk, but it does increase the risk of stroke.

The decision to use HT should be made by a woman and her doctor after weighing the possible risks and benefits (including the severity of her menopausal symptoms), and considering her other risk factors for heart disease, breast cancer, and osteoporosis. If they decide she should try HT for symptoms of menopause, it's usually best to use it at the lowest dose that works for her and for as short a time as possible. Breast implants: Silicone breast implants can cause scar tissue to form in the breast. Implants make breast tissue harder to see on standard mammograms, but additional x-ray pictures called implant displacement views can be used to examine the breast tissue more completely. Certain types of breast implants can be linked to a rare type of cancer called anaplastic large cell lymphoma (ALCL). It' is sometimes referred to as breast implantassociated anaplastic large cell lymphoma (BIA-ALCL).

This lymphoma appears to happen more often in implants with textured (rough) surfaces rather than smooth surfaces.

If ALCL does show up after an implant, it can show up as a lump, a collection of fluid near the implant, pain, swelling or asymmetry (uneven breasts). It usually responds well to treatment.

4 Ways to make medicine taste better

I got a call today from a 36-year-old mother at the end of her rope. Her five-year-old Jessie desperately needed to take a liquid antibiotic for an infected cat scratch on his right forearm, but he HATED taking it and she didn't know what to do.

"We had to switch to another medicine because he spit out the first antibiotic. Is there any way I can get him to take this one? It's three times daily for a week. I'm only getting one dose per day into him, and his arm is not looking too good."

Yesterday at my clinic we had our new family medicine resident physicians act as judges for a taste test of various liquid medicines, including 10 different medications used frequently by physicians and physician assistants. We used 5 different antibiotics and 5 commonly prescribed medicines, lined them up on a long table, and handed out scoring sheets to each "judge".

The goal was to have each resident physician evaluate each liquid medicine on 4 specific characteristics, similar to the idea of a wine tasting. One year we had it as a blind taste test, but with some of our residents very sensitive to gluten and others with allergies, we wanted to make it as safe as possible as well.

The first time we did this was 20 years ago, and everyone had a stomach ache afterward, so ever since then I keep a big trash can nearby as a spittoon, warning my novice evaluators to "Spit, don't swallow."

Each score card has a scale of 1 to 5, with the 1 score as Most Negative, the 3 as Neutral and the 5 as Most Positive. In front of each of the 10 bottles I set out a small clear plastic medicine cup and filled it about halfway with liquid medicine.

The first aspect judged was the medicine's smell. The judge picked up the cup holding the medicine, swirled it a few times, then inhaled to get the "Bouquet", writing down their score before moving on to the next phase, Taste and Texture.

The judge then dipped a clean plastic spoon into the liquid, then put it in their mouth to evaluate its texture, AKA the "Body", and its taste, or "Gustatory Merit". Once those were scored, the final element was the aftertaste left in the mouth by the medicine, scored as the "Finish".

I'll be honest with you; my 10 judges were brave. They valiantly persisted through all 10 samples, despite scrunched up faces, tongues that stuck out, and sounds of coughing and gagging.

There were other sounds, too: "Oh, YUCK!"

"I had NO IDEA this stuff tasted like THIS!" "Gaaaah!"

"I remember this from when I was a kid. It hasn't improved much...'

When we were done with the sampling and scoring, we brainstormed some ways to suggest to parents on how to reduce the "Yuck" factor of many liquid medicines. We ended up with some powerful pearls of wisdom/strategies that can help mask the taste and texture of liquid medicines.

I shared these strategies with Jessie's mom, and she called back a couple of days later, relieved to report that they were successful getting the medicine into Jessie. Between keeping his liquid antibiotic in the refrigerator, mixing it with chocolate pudding and chasing it with a spoonful of Hershey's chocolate syrup, they made it through!

Here Are 4 Tips to Help Medicine Taste Better: 1. Mix it.

Add it to something else to dilute the taste and texture. Any food will do, but my personal favorite is Hershey's chocolate syrup because it's simple, inexpensive, and does a pretty good job of covering up bitter tastes and gritty textures. 2. Chill it.

Try storing the bottle in the refrigerator between doses, even if it doesn't have to be refrigerated. The taste and aftertaste will be less powerful when cold.

3. Chase it.

Follow up quickly with a spoonful of a favorite food, the thicker the better. You can use fruit juice, ice cream, pudding, or my personal favorite, Hershey's chocolate syrup. I offered both ginger ale and club soda for the taste test judges to help them "cleanse their palate" between medicines, but they all reported that those didn't work very well.

4. Hold Your Nose. If you can hold your nose while swallowing the spoonful of medicine, you won't be able to taste it. Unfortunately, as soon as you breathe in, the taste comes back, so I suggest having a chaser ready to go.

Environmentalists just got some great news.

America's power plants will emit 2.3 percent less carbon dioxide this year compared to 2018. Even better, emissions will continue falling next year, according to a new report from the U.S. Energy Information Administration.

This progress isn't the result of new environmental protections or alternativeenergy breakthroughs. The credit actually belongs to natural gas firms.

These companies have harvested such massive quantities of the cheap, relatively clean-burning fuel that power plants have transitioned away from energy sources with higher emissions such as coal. The firms have also invested millions to make their drilling operations as environmentally friendly as possible.

Green activists often demonize these companies. They ought to thank them instead. New drilling technologies, such as fracking, greatly boosted natural gas production starting in the mid-2000s. Power plants soon began switching to this invisible fuel, which was cheaper than coal and also produces about 50 percent fewer carbon dioxide emissions. Thanks to this transition, U.S. carbon dioxide emissions fell 8 percent between 2010 and 2017.

Natural gas firms have actively tried to cut emissions even further.

Consider Ecosphere Technologies. The company developed a new technique that employs ozone to remove contaminants from fracking water. Via ultrasound technology, Ecosphere creates tiny bubbles that kill contaminants and help disinfect water when they pop. Then, the company runs an electrical current through the fluid to break down salts.

The process helps fracking operations reuse massive quantities of water, which reduces pressure on aquifers. It also reduces the need for using chemicals such as descaling agents and biocides.

These new techniques have already benefited the environment. In Pennsylvania, for example, the amount of water reused in fracking operations ballooned from 2.6 million barrels a year in 2010 to this was decades before thongs were a thing.

"I was especially fond of putting pink tutus on the boys and fantasizing what their inner most thoughts would be," Warren told someone who then told someone else until eventually it landed on my desk as a proven fact.

She also admits to putting guns on Barbie's hips and dreaming of a day when women will rule the world (as if they don't already).

"I'm gonna fill you full of hot lead Mister," she was heard murmuring. The Mister she was talking to was Charleton Heston when he was running the NRA, after all of that ape nonsense made him famous for acting like he cared about diversity of the species.

Finally, Joe Biden was never accused of wearing black face because his mask is rainbowhued so everyone was equally pleased or insulted depending on which way the wind was blowing the week the poll was taken.

Recent advancements have enabled firms to reduce -- and even eliminate -- these leaks. So far, firms have replaced or retrofitted about 30,000 old "high-bleed" controllers. The Environmental Partnership an alliance of U.S. energy firms committed to a greener industry -- led these replacements.

The industry has also made headway with new leakdetection technologies, such as optical gas imaging cameras. These devices scan large areas of natural gas infrastructure and detect the infrared signature of compounds like methane, catching leaks otherwise invisible to the human eve.

Such tools and precautions have yielded impressive results.

In Texas's Eagle Ford basin alone, methane pollution dropped 65 percent between 2011 and 2017. This occurred even as production soared 130 percent. Meanwhile, in the Appalachia basin, methane emissions from natural gas operations fell 70 percent in that same period, while call/visit5092979292.com

over 22 million in 2015.

The industry's also spearheading efforts to reduce emissions of methane -- a greenhouse gas. For instance, dozens of firms have joined together to inspect their pneumatic controllers -- which regulate the level, flow, and pressure of natural gas. These controllers sometimes release small amounts of methane into the atmosphere during normal drilling operations.

production nearly quadrupled.

Though often portrayed as reckless polluters, energy firms are actually using their technical know-how to do right by the environment. And judging by the latest emissions numbers, their efforts are paying off.

Seattle argues income isn't money

By JASON MERCIER Washington Policy Center

We previously mentioned the Court of Appeals has been asked to reconsider its bizarre income tax ruling this summer striking down state law banning a local income tax. Yesterday the City of Seattle responded with a brief arguing that income isn't money. According to Seattle's brief:

"Although the statute includes 'all moneys,' the legislature specified that 'moneys' means 'coin or paper money issued by the United States government.' RCW 84.04.060. The reference to 'moneys' thus refers to coin or paper money held as an asset, as traditional ad valorem taxes are understood, rather than income earned over time . .Thus, based on its plain language, the exemption does not apply to personal income subject to the City's tax."

Seattle is forced to make this argument because under state law, "moneys" are exempted from property taxes (the state supreme court has repeatedly ruled that income is property). Sometimes judges will look to the dictionary to help clear up disagreement over words. Here is how Webster's Dictionary defines income and money:

• Income – "a gain or recurrent benefit usually measured in money that derives from capital or labor."

• Money - "something generally accepted as a medium of exchange, a measure of value, or a means of payment."

We should know soon whose definition of income the Court of Appeals believes is more accurate

A Murderer's Confession

A WALK

WITH

SMITH

There was an individual in my life that I couldn't stand to be around. Every thought about them drifted toward the negative. They grated on my nerves and I despised them.

So, I murdered them. Shocking I know but even more grievous, I continued to murder them for years until God broke me of my sin and I humbly had to ask for forgiveness.

If we were honest, we would all confess to be murderers. Although you or I have never used a gun, knife or any other means to murder individuals, we killed them where it matters most: in our hearts.

Jesus said in the Sermon on the Mount, "You have heard it was said to those of old, 'You shall not murder; and whoever murders will be liable to judgment.' But I say to you that everyone who is angry with his brother will be liable to judgment" (Matt. 5:21-22). The word "anger" here is not just a feeling of displeasure or irritation rather it is synonymous with a deep feeling of hatred and contempt for another person. Jesus in this teaching is deepening the command "thou shall not murder" to the heart level along with widening the indictment to include everyone.

To put it bluntly, we are all murderers at heart.

The Scriptures are clear: hatred for others has no place in the Christian's life. It is antithetical to the Christian ethic and deserving of eternal condemnation. Furthermore, the Apostle John says it very pointedly in his epistle, "Everyone who hates his brother is a murderer, and you know that no murderer has eternal life abiding in him" (1 John 3:15).

is not difficult to It succumb to the temptation to hate individuals within our world today. With the polarization in our politics and the clash of worldviews that happens every moment in our country, it is very easy to hold those who disagree with us in contempt. Even when we are on the right side of the argument in matters concerning life, family, and morality, we can still be wrong because of our hatred for other people.

Now don't get it confused, standing up for what is right should not be considered "hateful" nor is being angered at unrighteousness. No, we should be angry that addiction to drugs permeate our valley or that young people are destroying their lives in this new "sexual revolution". We should hate political corruption and all manifestations of sin but again where we err is when we take that anger and hatred and transfer it onto individuals. As many of you know, I hate abortion. I hate the fact that little imagebearers are ripped limb from limb, dissolved in solution and starved to death in our community but I cannot as a Christian, hate the abortionist or the workers of Planned Parenthood.

The old adage is true, "Hate the sin but love the sinner" and Lord help us to do just that!

Is there someone or a group in your life that you are currently murdering in your heart? If there is, repent of that hatred and call upon the mercy of Christ to forgive you. Then pray for them that God will do what is good on their behalf (Matt. 5:44).

I was a murderer at heart and God helped me.

He can help you too.

NCW Media Inc.'s Obituary and Memorial Policy

CHELAN COUNTY

An obituary is a way for family members to commemorate a loved one's life and to notify the larger community of the deceased.

Obituaries are also used for historical and ancestral data. Memorials are another way of letting the community know about the life and memories of the person who has died. A memorial is different from an obituary. An obituary is usually current while a memorial can be written later. For publication in the Cashmere Valley Record or The Leavenworth Echo, an obituary or memorial needs to be typed and emailed to editor@ leavenworthecho.com no later than 4 p.m. Friday for the next week's issue. Funeral homes and chapels can submit obituaries by noon on Monday, except holidays.

Obituaries are priced per word while the charge for memorial ads are by the column-inch. Cost of the obituary/ memorial is due at the time of placement.
