Bipartisan Washington delegation calls on Trump to exclude cherry tariffs

REICHERT NEWS RELEASE

WASHINGTON – Representative Dave Reichert (WA-08), U.S. Senator Maria Cantwell (D-WA), U.S. Senator Patty Murray (D-WA) and Representative Dan Newhouse (WA-04) called on the U.S. Department of Agriculture to provide sweet cherries equal access to the relief measures being developed for U.S. agricultural commodities that have been negatively impacted by retaliatory tariffs. Last month, Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue announced that the department would provide assistance to agricultural producers harmed by increased tariffs and prices, but it has not yet released how and what agricultural commodities will receive this assistance.

“While the priority for our growers remains an end to the trade disputes, our cherry growers are estimating they will experience up to $86 million in damages from trade wars during the 2018 season, and they deserve the same assistance afforded to producers of other agricultural commodities that have been negatively impacted by retaliatory tariffs,” the members of Congress said in a letter to Secretary Perdue.

Sweet cherry growers are estimating up to $86 million in damages from the trade wars, with increased costs coming directly out-of-pocket.

“Because sweet cherries are highly perishable, the season is over and damages from increased tariffs and prices are hitting growers, we urge you to implement the support our cherry growers are requesting,” the members of Congress said.

Here is the full text of the letter:

“Dear Secretary Perdue:

We write to request that sweet cherries have equal access to any relief measures the Department of Agriculture provides for agricultural commodities impacted by retaliatory tariffs. While the priority for our growers remains an end to the trade disputes, our cherry growers are estimating they will experience up to $86 million in damages from trade wars during the 2018 season, and they deserve the same assistance afforded to producers of other agricultural commodities that have been negatively impacted by retaliatory tariffs.

The Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act (15 U.S.C 714) provides the Secretary of Agriculture broad authority to use the Commodity Credit Corporation to carry out almost any program that supports U.S. agriculture, including expanding domestic and international markets, providing disaster relief, supporting research and pest and disease management, and assisting farmers when crop prices drop or revenues decline. In addition, the Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2018 removed language that once limited the U.S. Department of Agriculture’s (USDA) ability to provide assistance to certain commodities. Therefore, we

Stonewater Ranch wants to extend an invite to a new guest - the American Mustang

By KALIE DRAGO
Leavenworth Echo Reporter

Compacting Christianity, teens and adventure is the overarching goal of non-profit organization, Youth Dynamic's Washington program, Stonewater Ranch. Now, Ken Solem, founder of the Leavenworth location and program director, is working toward adding a new dimension to the experience by bringing Mustangs to the 158 acre camp. But to build an all Mustang herd, there are several hurdles for Stonewater Ranch to jump over. The youth ministry needs $30,000 to fund the Mustang adoption, maintenance and care expenses and Bureau of Land Management approved facility renovations. "Stonewater Ranch is Youth Dynamic's first ever camp facility," said Solem. There are

Youth Dynamic programs in Idaho, Oregon and Washington. Stonewater Ranch is a sprawling property of land that multitasks hosting Northwest teens and serving as a home to horses. The ranch is geared towards youth and is adventure based with activities like rock climbing, backpacking, river rafting and of course, the horse program. It also has dual functions as a place for retreats, leadership training, and leadership conferences. "Everything we do is about our faith around here," said Solem. "Horses are a great indicator of people and personalities so horses help students break down the barriers." The mission to add Mustangs as a new attribute stemmed from a newspaper article Solem read seven years ago. Solem was inspired by the story featuring the Washington border control using Mustangs to patrol the Canadian border. The article went on to express the loyalty in the breed and that the Mustangs were trained by inmates from a Colorado prison. "I thought that's kind of a cool idea - an all Mustang string," said Solem. "So I thought about it back then, but I didn't have the bandwidth or the capacity to do something like that." However, with the arrival of horse trainer, Dorothea Coomer, two and a half years ago, it allowed the program to revive the idea of the Mustang addition. To strengthen the adventure camp, Solem decided to incorporate Mustangs to foster a relationship where both the teens and the horses can positively grow and learn. The goal is to replace the current, aging horses at the camp with, eventually, a full Mustang string. "It's a unique opportunity to get the word out about the American Mustang and they're just phenomenal horses actually. And so the idea is to use local students in a kind of mentoring and discipleship program. They're going to be training and working with the Mustangs," said Solem. The Wild Hearts program will allow students to harness in any intimidation or unease with Mustangs and also serve an underlying spiritual

243 YEARS OF FREEDOM

Veterans day, November 10 I always reflect a lot about all the Americans who have sacrificed to keep us free. Thinking about 1945 and the end of World War II. I may have been only 3 years old but vividly remember the family members and friends coming home and most of all the ones who did not come home. Like the other young Americans, I was determined to step up when my time came. A short time later during the Korean war, I watched the weekend paper. They always featured a Congressional Medal of Honor winner. A lot of these MOH recipients were Latinos and Native Americans. Native Americans have always been among the first to stand for our flag. Among those were the three Baker brothers of Cashmere. The oldest, Johnny served in the United States Army, brother

HOMETOWN MUSINGS
FRAZIER STRUTZEL

Bert was a door gunner in Viet Nam with the First Air Cavalry. The middle brother Frank and I shared a special bond because we were Marines. A very famous Army General named Amos, once said after witnessing Marines under his command conduct war stated, "there are only two kinds of people who understand Marines and they are -Marines-, and their enemy. Everyone else has a second opinion." Frank was a stand out athlete at Cashmere High and could have picked the university that he wanted to play at. Instead, he enlisted in the Marine Corps. Frank soon found himself in the middle of the Korean War with the First Marine Division. Similar to the Native Americans of the other wars he was subjected to insults of being called "War Hoop" and

"Chief" along with other insults. I often thought about Ira Hayes a Pima Indian who was one of the six flag raisers at Iwo Jima. His story was featured in the movie The Outsider. He and other south-west Indians mainly from the Navaho Nation became instrumental in beating the Japanese in the Pacific during World War II. Called the Code Talkers, their bravery and commitment to our nation in the many battles to stop the Japanese is legendary. I knew John, Frank, and Bert first because of social activity at our church. When Frank was the star athlete at Cashmere he was a legend to us younger kids. He came to our house a few times to date our cousin that lived with us. My brother Joe and I loved talking to him while he waited for our cousin. My brother new that he had been one of the first people to shoot a bull elk near their home up Yakson Canyon. My mother knew the boy's mother Mary, a native of upper Kelowna, BC and loved to visit with her.

After my service, I stayed close to Bert and Frank. He knew that I was a Marine and often talked about the battle of the Chosin Reservoir where he was one of the "Chosin Few", Marines who survived being overrun in the middle of the night by two hundred thousand Chinese troops that suddenly entered the Marine and Army positions. With the temperatures at 0 degrees and colder the battles were bloody and often "hand to hand". As a volunteer fireman I happened by the old Barneys after a meeting and work night. I recognized Frank sitting and stopped to say hi. He was very troubled and I wanted to listen. Eventually, he went back to the battle of Chosin and with tears in his eyes stated, "Frazier when we got down to Inchon and aboard the Navy ships I pulled out the photo I always carried. I was looking at my company and I could tear it in half. That's how many Marines my company lost. As we sat there I knew that getting this out of him was good therapy and we drank a couple beers. After he was more composed I asked if I could give him a ride anywhere and he said no. That was the last time I saw Frank and I am very sorry for that. Like so many Native Americans who love this country so, and put up with the insults but still stand to defend her I personally will never get finished with "Honoring Our Native Americans". Thinking of the sacrifices of our Natives makes me want to cry. The insults and belittling put these Proud People in a shameful position and like the Baker Brothers they so often end up with tragic consequences.

Frazier Strutzel was born in Leavenworth in 1942 and graduated Cashmere High School in 1960/61. He served in the Marines from '61-'63 and spent 26 years with the Cashmere Volunteer Fire Department and eight years on the Monitor Community Council where he grew up. He can be reached via gary@ncwmedia.net.

Free workshop on utilizing Link Transit buses

By KALIE DRAGO
Echo Reporter

Between steep gas prices and the ashy sky, driving and walking to destinations isn't always the ideal forms of transportation. For those that take advantage of the bus service option for commuting, there's a free opportunity provided by Link Transit to learn more about navigating Chelan County via its buses and routes. A workshop will be held in Wenatchee at 300 South Columbia Street on September 7 from 3 p.m. to 5:15 p.m. "It's an opportunity to share information with what we do and provide more information than our website," said Eric West, Link Transit marketing and communications officer. "It's an opportunity to communicate and answer in-depth questions." If not thoroughly informed, the transit system can be difficult and confusing to follow at times. West explained that there are some misconceptions about Link Transit and this workshop will give Chelan and Douglas county citizens a chance to get some background information. Link Transit will condense frequently asked questions that arise during the two hour and fifteen minute workshop. Some topics that fall under the umbrella include how to effectively use the transit system, how to purchase and pay fares, follow schedules and demonstrating an array of technologies that lessen some of the stress of riding transit. There will also be a chance to take a tour and ride one of the buses to get a hands on interaction. "It'll help people utilize the system and make it more relevant," said West. Space is limited to 30 participants. Reserve a spot by noon, September 6 by calling Selina Danko, (509)-664-7624.

Endangered species -- 'green' Republican -- spotted at ocean

By JOEL CONNELLY

The Republicans' 2016 gubernatorial nominee Bill Bryant: He has just led a backpack trip to protest Trump administration plan to allow oil and gas drilling in our Olympic Coast National Marine Sanctuary. The Republican conservationist, a species plentiful a century ago in the era of Theodore Roosevelt and Gifford Pinchot, has fallen in danger of extinction. Worthy of note, then, is a confirmed recent sighting on ocean beaches of Olympic National Park. As the Trump Administration prepared to roll out its "dirty power plan," and give new life to old polluting coal plants, 2016 Republican gubernatorial candidate Bill Bryant was leading a three-day walk to protect park beaches. The ex-gubernatorial candidate was protesting a Trump administration plan that would open the coastal waters of West Coast states -- including the Olympic Coast National Marine Sanctuary -- to oil and gas exploration. It's not likely to happen, but Bryant was about tapping the heritage of both political parties. Theodore Roosevelt was first to extend protection by creating wildlife sanctuaries along the Olympic Coast. Roosevelt created an Olympic National Monument to prevent extinction of the elk that now bear his name. A distant cousin and Democrat, Franklin D. Roosevelt, later toured the Peninsula -- for a guy in a wheelchair, he got around -- and created an Olympic National Park that now totals more than 900,000 acres. The ocean strip of the park was threatened, 60 years ago, by plans to build a road along the wilderness coastline. Activists from Olympic Park Associates hiked the beaches in protest. Twice, in 1958 -- 60 years ago -- and 1963, they had U.S. Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas for company. Bill Bryant launched onto the 60th anniversary of "Wild Bill's" first hike. The Bryant party discovered, however, a new problem along the Coast that demands immediate attention. "The entire focus of Preserve the Wild (name of hike) transformed over its three days," Bryant wrote on his Facebook page. "We began as a hike protesting oil drilling in our Olympic Coast National Marine Sanctuary, commemorating the 60th anniversary of a similar hike led by Justice Douglas. (It) became a mission to rescue WA's wild beaches from plastic." The protest hike was transformed on its last day to a litter pickup, and the backpackers reached the end of their trip laden with litter bags. "The wild beaches in our backyard are our responsibility to protect for future generations and they are littered with plastic washing ashore," Bryant wrote. The party came away resolved to monitor its own use of plastics. And Bryant will be back on the coast in 2019, on a mission designed to clean up the coast. It's unlikely he will be recognized at this fall's "Breakfast of Champions" by Washington Conservation Voters, which has turned into a Democratic pep rally lionizing "green" Governor Jay Inslee. Surely, Democratic ringers will note that Bryant cast a vote for letting Shell Oil use Seattle as base port for its (disastrous) effort to find oil in Alaska's Chukchi Sea. Still, Bryant is an outdoor activist who has turned his vacation place in the Methow Valley into a Theodore Roosevelt shrine, and who regularly lectures on Theodore Roosevelt. Conservation-minded Republicans helped give us the North Cascades National Park (Gov. Dan Evans), the Alpine Lakes Wilderness Area (Evans and U.S. Rep. Joel Pritchard), the Washington Wilderness Act (U.S. Sens. Evans, Slade Gorton and Rep. Sid Morrison) and the Columbia Gorge National Scenic Area (Evans, Gorton and a courageous Morrison). The species can't get much respect in either party these days, and environmental organizations -- such as League of Conservation Voters -- are now virtual Democratic appendages. Bryant did not emulate Douglas in one respect. The 63-year-old justice brought 21-year-old third bride Joanie Martin along on the 1963 beach hike. Douglas' air mattress sprang a leak. He promptly appropriated that of his new wife. The marriage did not last. If you would like more information on my hike, to see photos from the three days, or if you'd like information on next year's hike, please go to PreserveTheWild.net.

Reichert Statement on the Passing of Senator John McCain

Following the passing of Senator John McCain, Representative Dave Reichert (R-WA) released the following statement: "Today, we lost a true American hero. Senator John McCain dedicated his life to serving this great country. From his military service in the United States Navy, representing Arizona in the U.S. House of Representatives and U.S. Senate, to running for president in 2008, Senator McCain's record of public service will be remembered for generations. My thoughts, prayers, and sincerest condolences are with his family as they reflect on his life on this earth and joyfully celebrate his new life with his Father in Heaven."

Police / Safety Labor Day Weekend

By KALIE DRAGO
Echo Reporter

The thrill of having Monday off, the lingering effects from the post-work happy hour cocktail and the bad habit of speeding around tourists that slow to an infuriating speed to ogle the mountain side - safety hazards on the road amplify during holiday weekends, including upcoming Labor Day.

In an effort to keep drivers safe during the deadliest time of the year on state roadways, there will be an increase in DUI patrols between August 17 and September 3. According to a news release, Washington Traffic Safety Commission Region 12 Task Force, police departments and sheriff's offices from several counties, including Chelan, and Washington State Patrol will be joining the emphasis patrols. The law enforcement agencies are concentrating on drivers impaired by alcohol, marijuana and other drugs.

"We can't do DUI checkpoints in Washington state so Washington Traffic Safety Commission helps fund emphasis patrols for local agencies," said Chief Jason Reinfield. "Extra deputies, troopers and officers will be patrolling for the sole purpose to take impaired drivers off the road."

Drink responsibly is the fine, bolded print at the end of catchy wine cooler commercials and an ominous warning on a sign at a local bar - but there seems to be an underlying and underestimated component that isn't just in liquid form for DUI suspects. According to a Washington Traffic Safety Commission report, poly-drug use, which is two or more drugs or a combination of alcohol and drugs, is the most common form of driver impairment. Since 2012, poly-drug impaired drivers in fatal crashed have increased by about 15 percent every year. Statistics and numbers stack to reveal that drivers impaired are involved in nearly half of Washington traffic deaths.

In the WTSC report, there was a statewide roadside survey included that revealed drivers between ages 15-20 admitted to driving after marijuana use. The results also revealed that more than half of the young drivers believed marijuana improved their driving abilities.

"This is an especially dangerous belief, if for example, a driver uses marijuana to compensate for the consumption of another substance that impairs driving ability, such as alcohol," said Staci Hoff, PhD,

Research Director for WTSC, in the report. "The deadly consequence of combining these two particular substances is very apparent in all our fatal crash data."

Regardless of party favors, whether they can be purchased in a dispensary or a liquor store, driving impaired can result in fatal consequences. The WTSC is reminding drivers to plan ahead before indulging. Designated drivers, Uber or the patrolling officers' backseat are optional rides for any impaired drivers.

Labor day, like most public holidays, creates unsurprising, albeit frustrating traffic congestions and a higher chance of accidents. The working class migrate to a new destination for the extended weekend and hiatus from the office with a cooler full of beer and boat in tow. The surge of temporary freedom from the 9-5 leads to celebrating in the form of BBQ and sangria by the water. However, Washington Traffic Safety Commission and the police forces on patrol are keen on keeping the celebrations and roadway activity from overlapping.

"These tragedies are completely preventable," said Darrin Grondel, director of the Washington Traffic Safety Commission, in the report. "As a community, we can end DUI-related deaths."

Christianity is Unsafe

Christianity is not nor will ever be safe or comfortable by worldly standards.

The Christian experience is one of conflict, struggle, and difficulty. We battle against our own sinful desires and wrestle against the spiritual forces in the heavenly realms (Eph. 6:12). We are as it was said of Athanasius, contra mundi—against the world.

Jesus Christ didn't mince words when he said to his followers "behold I am sending you out as sheep among wolves" (Mk. 10:16) and "in this world you will have tribulation" (Jn. 16:33).

There was a time when churches took those words seriously, but I am afraid we have forgotten them in an American representation of Christianity. The reason why I use the label "American Christianity" is that what goes on here is an anomaly. Never before in the history of Christianity has there ever been a group of Christians that have been more prosperous, safe and comfortable as we have been.

Not long ago I would have viewed it as a blessing but now I am not so sure.

Can we really say the church is blessed when we prize our comfort over faithfulness to God? Is it truly a blessing when the average church goer knows very little or is completely ignorant of Jesus' own words concerning the cost of discipleship? Is it a good thing that we sit on, as

A WALK WITH PASTOR JOHN SMITH

Isaac Watts once wrote, "flowery beds of ease when others fight to win the prize on stormy and bloody seas?"

Again, I am beginning to think not.

Ask yourself when is the last time you have taken a look in the Scriptures or at church history and concluded that our Christianity in the West is woefully safe and comfortable in comparison?

When I look at the life and ministry of the Prophets, Apostles and early disciples of Jesus, words like "fun" or "party" don't come to the surface. Instead, "suffering" and statements like, "through many tribulations we must enter the kingdom of God" (Acts 14:22).

You know what else I see? Power from on high.

This supernatural power is not displayed in moments of ease or comfort rather clearly demonstrated in times of intense tribulation and conflict with the world.

A Christianity clothed in that kind of power looks unsafe and dangerous to the status quo.

Yet a Biblical, daring, counter-cultural, radical Christian expression is precisely what the world needs today.

It is that type of Christianity that turns the world upside down and makes people stop and pay attention.

Frankly, the world is not impressed with our multi-million-dollar buildings or the concert-like atmosphere of our sanctuaries.

There is no saltiness or brightness in elaborate church productions, only in gospel proclamation and Holy Ghost demonstration.

Recently, I had the opportunity to join with hundreds of Christians in Spokane. For three days, we descended upon the city to expose the evil of abortion and to preach the gospel in the open air.

It was risky, precarious and at times, our lives were even threatened. However, the experience of seeing the power of the gospel outweighed the peril we encountered.

The city of Spokane was confronted with Biblical Christianity and it was glorious.

Imagine what our own community would look like if instead of holding tightly to our comfort and the "niceties" of American Christianity, we go outside of the place of security and safety to Jesus, bearing the reproach he endured and the message he came to deliver (Heb. 13:13).

I can tell you the world would not yawn or easily dismiss what was happening.

They would halt to watch the spectacle and perhaps even condemn it as foolishness. Or go so far as to violently persecute it.

Regardless of the degree of response or reaction, a gutsy Christianity is guaranteed to make waves.

And that is a Christianity that is Biblical and historic.

A safe, comfortable, benign Christianity is not.

NCW Media Inc.'s Obituary and Memorial Policy

An obituary is a way for family members to commemorate a loved one's life and to notify the larger community of the deceased.

Obituaries are also used for historical and ancestral data. Memorials are another way of letting the community know about the life and memories of the person who has died. A memorial is different from an obituary. An obituary is usually current while a memorial can be written later.

For publication in the Cashmere Valley Record or The Leavenworth Echo, an obituary or memorial needs to be typed and emailed to editor@leavenworthecho.com no later than 4 p.m. Friday for the next week's issue. Funeral homes and chapels can submit obituaries by noon on Monday, except holidays.

Obituaries are priced per word while the charge for memorial ads are by the column-inch. Cost of the obituary/memorial is due at the time of placement.

Cashmere School Foundation sends graduates packing with cash for college

By GARY BEGIN

Founded in 2000 by the late Ron Doane of Doane's Pharmacy, The Cashmere Schools Foundation (CSF) each year gives scholarships to seniors at Cashmere High School who are headed to college. This year, 22 students were given scholarship awards. Some of them even won more than one.

The CSF also administers scholarships on behalf of individuals, companies and others who have created memorial scholarships.

Here is a list of graduating students and their CSF awards:

The CSF's purpose "is to provide scholarships and other post-secondary support to Cashmere High School graduates and strengthen the capacity of the District to provide a quality education to all students."

The CSF receives gifts and invests them into a "portfolio of income and growth producing investments."

Scholarships are given to students headed to colleges, universities and technical schools. Funds are not restricted to certain fields of study, grade point averages or involvement in particular groups, according to a Foundation brochure.

Gifts to the Foundation can be made by cash, securities, real estate, personal property, life insurance funds, collectibles and commodities. The Foundation accepts annual gifts and major one-time gifts.

Altogether the 2018 fund drive netted more than $60,000 with most coming from the annual golf tournament. CFS gives out 20 scholarships and manages 14 others. All 24 seniors that applied in 2018 received at least one scholarship, while some were multiple winners.

Interested students should consult their guidance counselors before the April 2019 deadline.

Stonewater Ranch

theme as well. Along with the satisfaction of unwavering loyalty shared with the horse being trained, Coomer explained that training Mustangs also gives young teens a sense of responsibility and purpose that is unique. It provides a gateway to the students' growth into becoming leaders and contributing members of the community.

"In my involvement with horses and my involvement with 4-H and mentoring younger horse people, I see that the benefits are really endless. I'm excited to bring that to Stonewater and to hopefully become known as a place that teenagers are really benefiting from and making a difference locally and then regionally as well," said Coomer.

The mission of the ranch is to align religion and youth in a way that encompasses a powerful experience that propels the teens to use the camp to build on a foundation with their personal faith. Horses provide a mirror for the teens to reflect on their own relationship with God.

"Within the horses, I see a ton of parallels with how God relates to me through my faith and Christianity and how I as a trainer relate to horses," said Coomer. "Once you have that relationship established, then it's about bringing that horse into being the best they can be and what they're created to be; and, that's what God wants for us. Underneath it all, that care and love the girls have for their horses is such a picture of how God is with us."

And not only will the new addition benefit the two legged campers, but also the four legged guests as well. There is an overpopulation of Mustangs on rangeland that affects the environment and other species that live on the range.

"In America today we have way more Mustangs than the rangeland can support in a healthy manner," said Coomer. "It's at least three times what the rangeland should be supporting."

The project will offer more Mustangs the opportunity to private care along with simultaneously improving the Mustang's quality of life and rangeland health. Stonewater Ranch will give the energetic, loyal, long-legged breed a purpose beyond eating for survival in a corral. Using Mustangs also helps dilute the intimidation of the breed's stigma of being wild and often cast as an unpredictable group of horses. Solem said that many people are afraid of Mustangs and stressed that they just need something to do outside of being contained inside in pens.

"Our goal is to show that they (Mustangs) can be used for things like a youth trail camp. That's something most people don't think of when they think Mustangs," said Coomer. "That will help show, especially in the Northwest, that these horses are useable cause there's a huge rift between people who want to save the Mustangs and people that see them as a menace or taking away rangeland that we could be using for resources like cattle."

However, the project requires a large sum to complete all the needed elements. The to-do list to accommodate the Mustangs include building a certain kind of fencing, adding to the stall capacity, re-configuring the round pen and training facility. The Stonewater Ranch Mustangs will be fueled all by donations. As the busy summer season finishes up, the camp can begin focusing its attention on promoting the fundraiser for the project. Both Solem and Coomer would like to have it underway by fall, particularly October or November. In five years they hope to have an all Mustang string for the camp.

As you walk up to the Stonewater Ranch's barn, you can see the domestic horses grazing leisurely.

What Else is in your Medicine

Donna was diagnosed with clots in her lungs 15 years ago and took the same dose of blood thinner for over 10 years with no problems, after which she and her doctor decided to stop it. Three years later, after developing shortness of breath she was given an antibiotic, which didn't help; it turned out to be blood clots in both lungs.

The doctors restarted her previous blood thinner and discharged her home. Although her breathing got better over the next few days she began to itch all over her body and felt "wiped out". She was in and out of the doctor's office for the next 3 weeks, trying one allergy medicine after another with no improvement in her whole body itching and fatigue.

When they changed her blood thinner to a different one, her itching and fatigue went away. Could she have developed an allergy to her old blood thinner medicine? Possibly, but there are other ingredients in our medicines that can trigger itching, fatigue, or cause our body to absorb them differently.

These "inactive" ingredients are called excipients, and lurk in our tablets, capsules and liquid medicines. There are dozens of compounds that can be used and many generic medicines use different excipients than the original brand's formulation.

Generic medicines only have to include the same active ingredient; they can have different colors, coatings, sizes and shapes as well as different "inactive" ingredients, leading to differences in how an original medicine acts in your body compared to its generic counterparts.

Tablets and capsules start out with a specific amount of the drug's active ingredient, usually as tiny crystals of powder. Other compounds called excipients are added to it to help preserve it, color it, sweeten it, and make it easier to manufacture and to help it dissolve under your tongue or inside your stomach.

Stabilizers or preservatives work to either protect the final product from contamination from microbes or slow down the degradation of the active ingredient when it's exposed to oxygen and moisture. Sodium bisulfite is a common stabilizer that helps an active ingredient stay potent longer. Some commonly used preservatives include sodium benzoate, sorbic acid, and parabens like methylparaben, ethylparaben, propylparaben and butylparaben.

A diluent is often added to active ingredients and coloring agents to help blend them evenly into the mixture that will become tablets or capsules. This gives the tablets a more consistent color and provides a consistent dose in each piece when tablets are cut or broken in half.

With most medicines, combining the active ingredient, diluent and dye or coloring agent doesn't provide enough powder to fill out each dose and create tablets big enough to pick up easily and swallow. A filler agent like cornstarch, lactose, sucrose, dextrose, or talc can be added to the mixture, adding bulk in order to create a particular size tablet or capsule.

Although you now have an active ingredient, a diluent, food coloring and a filler, to make the pill easier to manufacture when using automated pill presses to form each tablet, you will need to add a couple more excipients: a binder and a lubricant.

A good snowball fight needs snow with just a bit of moisture to help the snow "stick together" when forming snowballs. Dry, powdery snow is fun to ski in but is hopeless when trying to make good snowballs because it doesn't stick together well enough when you compress it. A binder gives powdered medicine the "stickiness" it needs to form a nice tablet shape when compressed.

When making waffles, you pour batter onto a hot waffle iron, and then close it while it cooks. When it's done, you open up the waffle iron to retrieve your treat. It's wonderful when the waffle lifts out easily onto your waiting plate, but aggravating when it refuses to come loose and you end up peeling each half off the sides of the waffle iron. When a tablet of medicine is pressed into its final shape it also needs to LET GO and drop away to allow more tablets to be formed. To help make that happen, a lubricant is often added to the mix.

Wetting agents or disintegrants are excipients that work to pull water into a tablet more quickly, speeding up the process of dissolving the tablet and releasing the active ingredient more quickly and completely.

Two other examples of excipients include flavorings added to chewable tablets and preservatives added to liquid medicines like ear drops, eye drops and nose sprays to discourage the growth of microbes.

Cherries tariffs

believe there are no limitations on how the USDA can assist our agricultural producers or what type of agricultural commodities qualify for assistance.

The 2,500 sweet cherry producers grow more cherries in the Pacific Northwest than any other region in the country. Sweet cherries have the shortest growing season of any tree fruit, which typically starts the beginning of May and ends by the middle of August. Sweet cherries are highly perishable, so the cherries must be picked and reach intended markets immediately. Sweet cherries cannot be stored. This harvest time sensitivity and short season creates tremendous pressure for the producer to sell cherries at any available price, even if it means financial losses.

On July 24, 2018, you announced that the USDA will use the Commodity Credit Corporation to provide assistance to agricultural producers that have experienced harm from the retaliatory tariffs that have been imposed on U.S. agricultural exports. You announced relief would come in three forms: a market facilitation program that will provide payments to producers that have and continue to experience damage from the ongoing trade wars, a food purchase and distribution program that will purchase surplus agricultural commodities, and a trade promotion program that will assist in developing new markets for agricultural products. Because sweet cherries are highly perishable, the season is over and damages from increased tariffs and prices are hitting growers, we urge you to implement the support our cherry growers are requesting."

The letter was signed by all four of the above mentioned federal government representatives from the state of Washington.

Not your average campground - Behind the scenes of a fire camp

By KALIE DRAGO

Echo Reporter

As the wildfire season continues to stretch across forests, the entire country remains captive. Newsstands bear a dizzying variety of headlines with words like 'containment', 'destroy', and 'evacuation', snagging attention from worried citizens. Staggering numbers regarding wind percentage, acreage and temperatures stack up to illustrate the danger of the fires. People pile into community meetings, dumbfounded by the wildfires happening in their own backyard. Collectively, there is a wide-eyed fascination and fear for the fires but above that there is also unanimous awe for the firefighters on the front lines. Those individuals taking on the fire headfirst make the idea of a hero three dimensional. From a behind the scenes lens, this is where the firefighters retreat after a 15 hour day and the mechanics behind keeping them going.

"40,388 acres with about 907 personnel on the fire as of this morning (Friday, August, 24)," said Michael Reichling, fire marshal. "This fire camp was established because we have to manage all the resources coming in to fight the fire. Fire camp is where all of the magic happens when it comes to managing all the resources out here, it's a very militarized system."

Pulling up on the dirt road entrance to the fire camp located at the Leavenworth National Fish Hatchery, there's a gaggle of men that swoop in to double check identification. The fire camp is an invite only affair and the strict procedure to enter only marines the importance of what is being conducted on the grounds.

There are endless rows of tents lined up where the firefighters retire to catch brief spurts of sleep before hustling back to the front lines. Gesturing around the camp, Reichling directed his attention toward the large boards that were scattered throughout the grounds, serving as a targeted destination for those inquiring updates. Scanning the board, there's an array of flyers and a map with recent information. There are forest service updates both in English and Spanish, the fire map and the activity situation report for the entire United States all stapled to the board.

"We have information boards around the camp we keep updated cause we internally have to keep people updated as well as externally," said Reichling.

Some of the internal subsections of the general staff are sectioned off into individual tan tents where beneath the entrance flaps are a series of constant activity. There's operations who run the crews and Reichling referred to as working 'boots on the ground'. Their neighbors are the planning group who take care of mapping and looking at the next operational period to gauge what resources are needed based on current condition of the fire. Along the row, there is logistics those in charge of the mechanics of what keeps the machine churning ahead: food, water, showers, medication are in the realm of their responsibility. Another tan tent is the finance part of the operation, similar to a banker's nine to five or a part time shift at the local deli, the staff on the camp ground also fills out time sheets and finance takes care of pay. And looking above the row of tents, there's a cable that travels to a trailer to provide the camp's own Internet system.

"It is a very well oiled machine when it comes to supplying everything we need to do to get the fire contained," said Reichling. "That's the bottom line. That's why we're here."

Glancing around the grounds, there's a variety of state license plates and even another country's flag waving beneath our own stars and stripes. Reichling pointed out the Australian flag and explained that help for the fires went beyond the U.S. border.

"We have Australians out here working and New Zealanders. They came over, I think there's 50 or so. They came in, did a transition type of training and then they're out on the different fires," Reichling said.

Many of the force behind the fire camp are individuals that were dispersed across the country and funneled into the Fish Hatchery located fire camp to help out.

"You meet these people from all over the country, it's just amazing," said Reichling. "It's a constant supply, resupply situation here. I've been doing this for forty years and it still amazes me how it all comes together."

Notably there's many Idaho adorned vehicles due to the contracted catering company traveling across state lines from Boise, Idaho to provide three meals a day. There is hot breakfast and hot dinner provided and a sack lunch. For lunch, even those that tend to be herbivores can vouch for the vegetarian option whereas others snag the regular brown bag before hurrying back to their individual duty. There's a sign with large letters reminding those in line for food to wash their hands or splash some Purell on their palms.

"Sanitation is one of the major concerns out here," said Reichling. "When you get a thousand people living in a field one sickness can really spread far from food, human touch."

So while it can be tempting for do-gooders to show their gratitude with a basket full of sweet treats for the firefighters, that risks contamination and possibly causing a widespread sickness to infiltrate the camp. Instead of showing thanks in the form of Nana's homemade chocolate chip cookies, Reichling says put up signs with encouraging sentiments for the firefighters: "THANK YOU". A simple enough gesture, but one that is just as sweet as sending baked goods.

Regardless of how big or small the poster is, how scribbled or neat the handwriting is - just putting up a sign boosts morale and illuminates the gratefulness for the individuals that curl up in a tent after long hours, are limited to two cloths for a brief shower and have to face the fire that keeps us all on edge.
