took the life of Brewster teacher, Gary Knowlton. Knowlton, 50, was also a part-time lifeguard for the Manson Parks and Recreation Department and was riding his bicycle on Apple Acres Road north of the Lake Chelan Airport when the accident occurred on the evening of July 16, 2016.

Sources at the Chelan County Prosecutor's Office said that Maciel has been remanded to a detention facility in Monroe for further processing and determination as to where he will serve out his sentence. Under current sentencing guidelines, Maciel may later be eligible for parole or a reduced sentence.

Maciel fled the scene of the accident. Maciel's abandoned pickup was later discovered in an orchard and his involvement in the fatality was determined.

A restitution hearing for Maciel has also been scheduled for August 23.

After two months in hiding, Maciel surrendered to authorities on Sept. 15, 2016. Maciel was charged with vehicular homicide and hit and run. He later pleaded guilty to a reduced charge of second-degree vehicular manslaughter.

Bridgeport Daze draws parade entries, vendors, spectators

By MIKE MALTAIS STAFF WRITER

BRIDGEPORT - Unlike the 2016 last-minute scramble to resuscitate and put on an earlier-cancelled Bridgeport Daze, this year's event was pre-planned and good-to-go as parade entries, vendors, participants and spectators converged in Bridgeport, last Saturday morning, June 3.

Parade participants were already lining up at 9 a.m. for the 11 a.m. parade start and as the minutes ticked by, more gathered at the old track field east of town for the march down Columbia Avenue.

Bridgeport Chamber of Commerce President and Bridgeport Daze organizer, Zeke Martinez adopted a flexible parade schedule that made room for anyone who showed up Saturday morning to join the parade procession.

A major in computer science is Anna Schluneger's plan when she attends Western Washington University and minor in music.

Isaac Wall's goal is to get the agriculture experience that will allow him to return to the valley as an intern to become an orchard manager at Stennes Orchards. He plans to complete the Horticulture Tree Fruit Program at WVC toward that end. Lane Webster is going to work at O'Connell Plumbing and Sam Gordillo plans "to get a job and go from there."

"I was a little concerned," said Martinez about an adequate parade turnout. "A lot of them were last-minute entries."

By parade time, more than two dozen entries from marching bands and motorcycle groups to hot cars and prancing horses provided plenty for spectators gathered along the city's main drag.

"I did talk to some people yesterday and they told me they were happy we held the event this year," Martinez said.

Music, games and vendors in and around Fireman Park offered a variety of diversions throughout the day. City personnel pitched in to provide traffic control and park clean-up services.

education." Wyss, is the government affairs director for Gebbers Farms and recent candidate for 12th District state senator. In a media release, Driessen wrote that Wyss "has had a positive impact on our schools, our community, our country and our state."

Wyss was instrumental in bringing the Cal Ripkin Sr. Foundation "Badges for Baseball" program for at-risk youth to Brewster, as well as to Omak, Chelan, Wenatchee and East Wenatchee. Badges for Baseball uses the game to join law enforcement officers with youngsters to improve communication, respect and teamwork.

Wyss helped open the first Boys and Girls Club in North Central Washington at Brewster and served as chairman of the Okanogan County Long Term Recovery Group for the 2014 and 2015 wildfires, the two largest in state history.

"Jon was paramount in getting the Brewster Boys and Girls Club established here," said BBGC director Brian Paine. "It is the proof of concept model for how the Boys and Girls Clubs can served rural areas of Eastern Washington."

Wyss, the son of a middle school teacher, "understands the importance of education and worked with our local community members to pass the Brewster School Bond," Driessen said.

Brewster Wall of Fame honoree puts local history on display

BY MIKE MALTAIS
STAFF WRITER

BREWSTER – History was literally on display at Brewster High School last Friday and Saturday, June 2-3, as Brewster alumnus, Ralph Fries brought a comprehensive exhibit of southern Okanogan life and profiles of early pioneer women to the school's small gym.

Fries, a 1955 graduate of BHS and grandson of Ulrick Fries, author of "From Copenhagen to Okanogan" covered two walls of the gym with large poster boards full of stories, photos and information about Paradise Hill, Brewster Flats, Davis Canyon, the Chiliwist, Cougar Canyon, Monse, North Star, Harmony Heights, and College Flats.

Fries also profiled six pioneer women: Katherine (Miessen Bagwell) Shipman, Nancy (Gerig) Rawley, Ruth (Bluett) Thayer, Samantha (Wheeler) Curtis, Mary Ellen (Newton) Wilson and Anna (Fries) Fries.

Visitors to the exhibit were treated to details about family, school and agricultural life and some even learned a fact or two they didn't know before about their ancestors. Art and Cindy Brown of Paradise Hill discovered that a relative had once served as the area postmaster.

One panel of the exhibit told the story of a 13-year-old North Star resident, Jimmie Fehlhaber, who was attacked and killed by a cougar in the winter of 1924, while walking between farms through what is now called Cougar Canyon.

Fries presented the exhibit to the Brewster School District for use in its future historical curriculum.

Following graduation and vocational school, Fries enlisted in the U.S. Navy in 1957 where he served with distinction through the Vietnam conflict. After 20 years of military service, Fries retired in 1977 and became a long-haul truck owner-operator and served on the board of

Beware of hungry wolves

City council works very hard and is to be commended. Grants fund the majority of their projects. Whether the grant is funded by a non-profit, or state or federal monies, the taxpayer foots the bill. Just, because it's a nonprofit does not mean it can't earn money. To stay in business and promote their agenda, they have to make money. Non-profits are not owned by anyone and not allowed to distribute profits to anyone but they must make money in order to stay in business. Because, all grants come with strings, I believe all the strings should be published and discussed at city council meetings. Because the strings are established by the grants criteria, local control is given over to whoever manages the grants. Using outside agencies with their put a dot here if you like it philosophy, changes it from true citizen input or would never happen because the most citizens don't want it and aren't interested to a sales job from the business putting on the presentation. The public lands trust is winding up their presentation. I would encourage you to google and read the documents "Conservation Easements and the Urge to Rule". Also, how will funding for the bike trails, walking trails, complete streets impact our streets? Been to Spokane lately? That's a good example. Ben Franklin said "When the people find that they can vote themselves money that will herald the end of the republic." We are a republic not a democracy. A democracy is two wolves and a sheep deciding what to have for dinner. I fear we have slipped into democracy and sheep are on the menu.

Teachers unions not broken

Teachers are "taking back control of their profession" bleats Jami Lund, employee of the extremist and inappropriately labeled organization, the Freedom Foundation. Which begs the question, when did they lose control? For the majority of teachers in our state, this suggestion that teachers don't have control, don't have a voice, and don't have a choice is not merely offensive, it is an outrageous lie. When it comes to the truth, the Freedom Foundation is on the wrong side of history.

The WEA is a democratic organization just like every other labor organization is in which every member has an equal voice in their representation from contract proposals to the final product to the very issue of representation at all. In fact, Jami Lund actually agrees with this as he points out that there have been a few small conservative districts that have opted to exercise those rights.

However, even if these small rural conservative districts make such decisions to withdraw, it is worth asking, how much of the decision was without the influence of money and power that comes from out of state coffers? From the multi-billion dollar corporations and foundations whose stated goals are quite simple; defund labor organizations at all costs.

Now why would they want to do this? The answer is relatively simple but is part of a much larger, coordinated effort that has nothing to do with grass roots. Labor organizations do in fact lobby and otherwise participate in the political process and where they do endorse politicians across the political spectrum, this is the issue with groups like the Freedom Foundation and the Bradley Foundation. These organizations have no interest in a balanced political process and in a fair bit of irony, what they are after is nothing short of political domination in an extremely monopolistic way. These organizations don't just want our political process to be dominated by only conservative republicans though, there is a specific caliber of extremist right wing political dogma they are after which does not represent where the majority of Americans are.

It is about politics. It's about dismantling a balance of political thought that has been the cornerstone of what makes our democratic institutions a beacon to the rest of the world.

While few facts are presented by Jami Lund he does point out the formation of associations in a few small rural areas. Now, an association must still register with the Public Employment Relations Commission (PERC) as an association. Associations still collect dues for representational purposes and can and do lobby politically for their professions and issues. Associations can even grow...

At some point, an association providing a democratic voice for workers in the workplace will be at odds with the Freedom Foundation. While they would like the reader to believe that this is just about the evil, monopolistic, dictatorial

WEA and it's powerful union bosses (one of their favorite terms), this is completely untrue.

The Freedom Foundation, their corporate backers are about one thing and one thing only- unchecked wealth. Remove labor organizations and the framework they have provided and nothing stands in the way of the rapid decline in wages and benefits and safe working conditions. As wages and benefits are stripped, shareholder profits and CEO pay goes up and so widens the income inequality that exists in our country at an unprecedented level not seen since the Gilded Age.

Sadly, we are already in that decline as these multi-billion dollar efforts have convinced some that labor organizations are unneeded and the parallels between wage decline, stagnation and union density decline are quite clear and convincing.

"Locally-controlled unionism for the 21st century" -Jami Lund says. The funny thing is, if Jami Lund and the Freedom Foundation were truthful in their support of this concept we wouldn't be very far apart at all because every single one of my "union boss" colleagues spends the majority of their efforts on ways to engage and solicit the needed input from their members at the local level.

No evidence suggests that the Freedom Foundation supports the average teacher or their issues, just the contrary. Lund himself has argued that giving teachers raises and improving their benefits isn't beneficial in classrooms, and he has fought against them as a school board member. He has even argued that teachers should take pay cuts to prevent shortened school years. Yet, as TIME reported at the beginning of this school year, teachers are spending $1.6 billion a year out of their own pockets to buy school supplies for their students. To summarize: Lund and the Freedom Foundation want to pay teachers less and make them work more. Lund and the Freedom Foundation also support privatizing our education system, sending our tax dollars to private religious schools instead of to our public school classrooms. While they cloak their privatization support in the language of "school choice," the truth is this: every tax dollar spent unconstitutionally propping up private, religious schools is a dollar that isn't being invested in public schools that benefit all of our children.

When these folks from the Freedom Foundation make visits into our community, politely ask them to stop pedaling their outside, politically motivated propaganda in our local communities. What we have here in North Central Washington isn't perfect, but it isn't broken either.

What's a few Wurlitzers among friends?

There seems to be a controversy about harvesting organs from executed prisoners in China. What's the fuss? They have plenty of prisoners who owe society a debt and plenty of people who would still like to keep living the dream in the fake communist society, which is teetering on capitalism run amuck.

By that I mean if a wealthy Chinese toy manufacturer, who has made his fortune selling cheap goods to Walmart on the backs of slave prison labor, needs a new kidney or heart or liver, then why not get it from the same demographic he has exploited for years anyway?

What's a few Wurlitzers (organs) among friends anyway? I make light of this PC cause made into an issue by the liberals because why should we care if these hapless souls that are headed for death actually give back a meaningful benefit to society before they go?

APPLES TO APPLES

Well, it turns out the real issue is that these organs are being harvested without the permission of the condemned men.

Again, who cares? Did they give permission to be imprisoned or to be found guilty or to be caught in the first place? Of course not. So why are medical ethicists suddenly falling all over themselves demanding that the about-to-be-executed give permission for organ donations?

The Chinese are nothing if not practical. They control the birthrate of the populace as best they can. They control which children can go to the best schools and which kids are destined for plowing fields. They recognize the best athletes and the best scientists and treat them accordingly.

I saw this invented controversy on a PBS Newshour show last week and I am still baffled as to the big deal. Is the point that when a person dies the disposition of the body is up to that person and/or his family?

Is it unethical to remove a piece of the body so that another may live with or without permission from the donor? I have a small heart emblem on my Washington state driver's license denoting the fact I am willing to donate organs upon my death from a car crash.

It is a simple procedure and needs no further explanation.

I would much rather complain about the Chinese penchant for believing rhino horns are aphrodisiacs thus causing massive poaching in Africa and driving those poor critters into extinction, than to complain about a few organs being taken to allow others to live.

As usual, PC complaints are misguided. If the Chinese hurt your feelings that much, then quit buying toys for little Johnny and shut your pie holes. If the rights of the condemned are that important to you then offer up your own organs and pay for putting them on dry ice and flying them to Beijing.

Are liberals so naive as to not realize only the wealthy among the Chinese are going to get these organs anyway even if they have to buy them from America?

If I should be crushed by a landslide on Highway 2 one fine day, but my heart is still good enough to be harvested and donated, I just like these Chinese prisoners, will not have a choice as to whom gets my organs, nor will I care. Although one might say I cared enough to give permission ahead of time for the "state" to take the heart, so do I believe the prisoners in China are giving the state permission the moment they commit the crime which ultimately leads to their execution by the state.

Is this convoluted logic or the musings of one who understands the organist at a ballpark plays the same instrument as Beethoven, but probably gets more benefits and his own parking spot?

Such is life ...and death in our modern world.

Cracks appearing in the tyranny of global oppression

It was only a few weeks ago that I published an opinion warning about the threat to our freedom posed by the climate change/global warming insanity.

The problem is that our government and our media have become addicted to the concept that humans are causing irreparable harm to our environment. Harm they claim will inevitably make life on earth unsustainable. For government zealots it is a perfect storm. Only government can create the regulations and laws needed to protect us from this external threat to our existence.

The result is that many unformed and fearful subjects have fallen prey to the tyrants, government zealots and their enablers around the globe.

If the science were solid they would have ease to support their position. But the science is not settled. Climate change zealots claim a consensus of scientists agree, but science is not settled by a vote. Science is settled by incontrovertible facts.

A growing number of well qualified scientists have begun to question the science.

IN MY OPINION
Bill Forhan
Publisher

Some have even gone so far as to call it a hoax. That includes Ian Plimer, Professor Emeritus of Earth Sciences at the University of Melbourne, and Patrick Moore, a former President of Greenpeace. According to Wikipedia Moore holds a PhD in ecology from the University of British Columbia.

Both Plimer and Moore have been vilified as misguided individuals who have turned their back on science to become paid spokesmen for the oil industry. Notice that they do not challenge the scientific facts Plimer and Moore use to make their case against global climate change.

First of all, Plimer and Moore both say carbon dioxide is not a pollutant. In fact they both make the case that carbon dioxide levels are at the lowest level in the history of the planet. Moore says that plant life is currently on a starvation diet when it comes to carbon dioxide. He points out that many farmers today have to pump carbon dioxide into their greenhouses to encourage the plants to grow.

Years ago basic high school biology taught us that plants breath in carbon dioxide and release oxygen. The climate zealots want us to believe that we must reduce carbon dioxide by abandoning our use of fossil fuels like oil and coal. Logically, that means reducing carbon dioxide will ultimately reduce the levels of oxygen as plants begin to die.

If carbon dioxide levels were at historically high levels then the climate change folks would have a valid concern, but both Plimer and Moore dispute that underlying premise. Also, if greenhouse gasses were at historically high levels plants would be thriving without the addition of carbon dioxide as posited by Moore. Zealots ignore these serious challenges to their scientific facts.

Political talk show hosts Rush Limbaugh and Mark

Levin both pointed out this week that the programs promoted by the climate change lobby fall heaviest on the poor. Patrick Moore also has made the point that the solutions proposed by the climate change zealots hit the poor harder than the rich and powerful. Their programs result in higher energy costs, higher food costs and fewer job opportunities.

The reality is we all want a cleaner environment. We don't want polluted air or lead in the water supply. Levin says people who are better off financially are more likely to support real solutions to cleaning up our environment.

Quite frankly it is insulting when liberals accuse conservatives of destroying the planet for our children and grand children while they saddle our progeny with a debt they cannot possibly pay.

President Trump got it right when he stood up to the pressure and withdrew the U.S. from the Paris Climate change accord. Unfortunately he did not do it because the entire underlying global warming/climate change agenda is nothing more than an fraud perpetrated by liberal elites who want to steal your freedom.

Free, educated and industrious people can find new creative solutions to the problems that we all face. Our founding fathers understood that government rarely does. Have government solutions gotten any smarter since they wrote the constitution?
