State Fire Marshal urges wildfire preparedness as summer nears

NCW News Ward Media

OLYMPIA — With warmer and drier weather expected across Washington this summer, state officials are warning residents to prepare for an increased risk of wildfires. In 2024, the State Fire Marshal's Office (SFMO) deployed its All-Risk Mobilization Program to assist in 30 wildfire incidents statewide. The combined response cost approximately $23 million, underscoring the growing financial and environmental impact of large-scale wildfires.

"As we look forward to sunshine and outdoor activities, wildfire prevention and preparedness must remain a top priority," the State Fire Marshal's Office stated in a release issued Wednesday.

To reduce the risk of wildfires, SFMO officials recommend clearing dead vegetation and other fuel sources away from structures, participating in community cleanup days, practicing daily fire safety, using fire-resistant construction materials, and staying alert to emergency notifications.

Preparedness efforts should also include assembling an emergency kit with food, essential medications, important documents, a batterypowered radio, and a first aid kit. Families are encouraged to practice evacuation routes, establish communication plans with neighbors, and prepare necessary vehicles with supplies.

The SFMO emphasized that residents should follow evacuation orders and heed guidance from emergency personnel in the event of a wildfire.

Additional wildfire safety information can be found through the National Fire Protection Association.

For further resources or questions, residents can contact the State Fire Marshal's Office at (360) 596-3904 or visit www.wsp.wa.gov/ state-fire-marshals-office.

Lorie began her career as a candy striper at the community hospital in Chelan and ended as a nurse practitioner in Bozeman, Montana, with stops along the way in Spokane, California and Alaska. She cared for patients, family, and friends for over 50 years and was exceptional in her knowledge, compassion, and unassuming way.

Lorie was a loving daughter, wonderful sister, and special aunt who loved her family fiercely and was always quick with a word of encouragement and unhurried with a great big hug.

at Tsillan Cellars. "For our Reserve Chardonnay, we farm intentionally-reducing crop yield, opening the canopy for sunlight, customizing irrigation, and allowing for extended hang time-all to craft a precise flavor profile for Garrett's reserve program."

Owner Dr. Bob Jankelson recalled the origins of the vineyard. "When we planted Chardonnay vines on the south shore of Lake Chelan in 2000, there were no other vineyards in the area. We had no precedent, just the belief that the soil, slope, wind, and sun exposure were ideal. It was serendipity-and a bit of vision-that led us to the perfect site," he said. Head Winemaker Garrett

Grubbs, who has led the winery to record-breaking accolades over the past four years, described the winemaking process. "Within hours of harvest, grapes are gently pressed and transferred into oak barrels," he said. "We use only native yeasts from the vineyard, and the wine spends nine months in barrel to develop texture and richness. It's a true collaboration with Nic and Dr. Bob, and a privilege to work with fruit of this caliber."

Chelan-Douglas Land Trust celebrates 40 years of conservation

By Taylor Caldwell Ward Media Staff Reporter

WENATCHEE - Since 1985, the Chelan-Douglas Land Trust has been working to preserve the region's natural areas – securing clean air and water, supporting wildlife, and ensuring the outdoor spaces can be enjoyed by generations to come.

"We believe that everyone should have the opportunity to experience the beauty, peace, and connection that nature provides, and we warmly invite all individuals and families to enjoy our lands," said Associate Director Angela Morris.

Over the last 40 years, the community-based organization has permanently protected over 27,000 acres of land. Chelan-Douglas Land Trust has secured trail systems, such as 11 miles of trail in Cashmere's Nahahum Canyon, and 33 miles of trail at Castle Rock, Sage Hills Gateway and North Foothills.

It has also preserved areas for environmental purposes, such as improving wildlife habitat and climate resiliency on over 2,100 acres of Chelan Coulees Reserve, restoring sections of the White and it's done, but there's always Entiat rivers, and saving the Nason Ridge Community Forest from timber harvest.

When considering land for conservation purposes, the organization not only takes the environmental and community impact into account, but it also considers its location.

"This concept of looking for properties that are connected to other public lands or other areas-it's really important," said Morris. "One, it provides a continuous corridor for whatever habitat we're attempting to help protect... There's continuous public access too, so it just enriches the public's experience if they're able to move from our properties to the next property."

The process of land conservation is a marathon, not a sprint. Chelan-Douglas Land Trust often works with local organizations, businesses, and individuals over the course of many years to secure funding and preserve properties.

"There's just many, many details in the process, and it can take a long time, so you have to be willing for, you know the term, "delayed gratification?" We get to celebrate when peaks and valleys during the process," said Conservation Director Mickey Fleming.

Yet, the work doesn't end there. With nearly 7,000 acres in the region owned and managed by Chelan-Douglas Land Trust, as well as conservation easements on an additional 15,000 acres, the organization relies on a network of members, community volunteers, partner organizations, and conservation landowners to maintain healthy land and water. This support is often tasked with monitoring habitat, removing invasive species and planting natives, and restoring riparian areas.

"I think people don't realize that, you know, once you have a piece of property, that there needs to be ongoing maintenance of it forever...So, there's a lot of work that is done," said Morris.

Through its work, Chelan-Douglas Land Trust has recognized education as an equally vital component of land conservation and stewardship. In addition to providing unique field guides, weed control information, and resources for parents and teachers, the organization leads kids' educational programs and group hikes and outings. It also sponsors an annual environmental film series at the Wenatchee Valley Museum and Cultural Center, as well as a Wenatchee Naturalist Course through Wenatchee Valley College.

As it looks toward the future, the organization plans to continue its dedicated outreach and engagement efforts, which have resulted in recent membership growth and increased community participation. It also plans to welcome a new executive director in June.

building on this momentum by expanding opportunities for people to connect with the land-whether through volunteering, attending events, or joining guided hikes along our extensive trail system,' said Morris.

Mirror Northwest returns: Wenatchee Valley College revives literary journal

essays, in addition to artwork and photographs from writers and artists at the college and across Chelan, Douglas and Okanogan counties.

After the naming of their English professor Derek Sheffield as Washington State Poet Laureate, it suddenly seems like WVC is arts and literature central. In fact, it seems important to familiarize yourself with the school's Grove Recital Hall and the MAC Gallery — the Music and Arts Center at WVC — which since "LitKnight" sounds so much like "LitMic," which is the monthly event that she's been hosting since September of 2022. But Holly's not alone as a faculty advisor. She's also got Ana Maria Spagna and Arius Elvikis with her in this effort, as well as student editors Anessa Hanson (literary editor) and Sara Bender (art editor).

The project was resurrected in 2023, when Thorpe and Spagna both began working at the school. They had heard artists who contributed to the inaugural issue of the reborn journal reading their work and speaking about their art. Then the event moves to the MAC Gallery for a reception afterward. Wenatchee Valley College is at 1300 Fifth Street in Wenatchee.

ANDREW SIMPSON/WARD MEDIA

Wenatchee Valley College will be the site of the unveiling of a long-awaited literary and arts journal covering our area.

By Andrew Simpson Ward Media Staff Reporter

– Arts WENATCHEE culture in Wenatchee is undergoing a sort of renaissance these days. There has, of course, always been a vibrant theater "scene" here in the Valley. There's never been a dearth of music here, but the number of incredibly talented local musicians is at an alltime high, as is the number of performances.

Visual art galleries and pop-up exhibitions featuring painters are happening all over town, rather than just in the Two Rivers showroom. We're even seeing unconventional art forms like pottery taking hold with new co-ops and studios cropping up in places large and small.

But apart from the Write on the River Conference, which is itself back after 7 years away, we had not previously seen any particular showcase for the immense literary talent we know exists here in the Valley, other than a single monthly gathering assembled over the last two and a half years by poetry impresario Holly Thorpe, held up in Leavenworth.

Now, Wenatchee Valley College is proving that they are an epicenter for this renaissance by reintroducing Mirror Northwest, their annual literary and arts journal, back for the first time since it was last published in 2017, although it is thought to have originated (its history is hazy) in the late 1960s. In the pages of Mirror Northwest, you'll find poetry, short fiction and will be the site of "LitKnight," an event sponsored by the WVC Foundation.

Their return issue is chockfull of submissions from students at the college, but organizers are eager to point out that submissions will be welcome from the public as well for future issues. The rerelease of the journal itself came on so suddenly that there wasn't time to solicit them this time around. Submissions for the 2026 edition of Mirror Northwest will open to the public in Fall 2025.

It's clear that the aforementioned Holly Thorpe had some hand in naming the event that coincides with the restoration of the journal, about it from Sheffield, and immediately set to work on bringing it back.

Ana Maria Spagna spoke to us by phone and emphasized the fact that even though this issue is all internallysourced, they're anxious to get submissions from the public. "We want this to be representative of everyone's voices," she says. "I feel like there are a lot of people who will be interested in this who don't even know it right now,' she continues, "and theirs might be just the voice we need.'

LitKnight will be at Grove Recital Hall on Thursday, May 15 from 6-8 p.m. and will feature writers and

Andru Gomez brings jazz, blues, and style to PNW music scene with new EP release

By Andrew Simpson Ward Media Staff Reporter

LEAVENWORTH — A restaurant in Leavenworth on a Thursday night at the beginning tourist season is not an ideal spot for a crowd that's truly engaged with the performance. If you're a musician whose songs are primarily aimed at people actively listening and participating in the show - rather than treating it as ambience for the conversations they were already having, the dates they were already on, the meal they'd be eating whether you were there or not - it canbe hard to feel appreciated.

Not so for Andru Gomez. The Moscow, ID-based musician is used to a dinner show. In fact, he says, he usually treats his first set as a dinner show, setting a tone and letting stragglers just coming in settle down and get used to the music, before ramping up the volume or intensity in a second set.

That explains the opening of Gomez's night at Rhein Haus in Leavenworth on May 8. Jazz guitar with a suspiciously French vibe is soon confirmed as he reaches the chorus of "Ooh La La (I'm Not Here, Go Away)," a song that, through the creative use of a loop pedal, immediately shows off his fingerboard dexterity and allows him to use his voice as he will for the rest of the evening: As an instrument in this one-man-band.

He has a light touch that lets him control the volume of his playing without adjusting too many knobs or dials. Then, just the show, he tells the crowd they'll get a prize if they can guess who wrote the song he's about to play. Launching into the song, it sounds a lot like Santana's treatment of Fleetwood Mac's "Black Magic Woman" until he comes in with lyrics. He's blended the nearlyflamenco guitar into a purely Andru Gomez version of "Do It Again," by Steely Dan.

And although the covers he elects to play are eclectic from Atlanta Rhythm Section to Nancy Sinatra, Buffalo Springfield to Jim Croce — it's the originals that really shine. That's because they, too, sound familiar enough that you're singing along by the second time through the chorus.

Throughout, he transitions seamlessly between a Tom Waits-style growl to an airy David Crosby sighing of sound, most especially on his cover of "Horse With No Name" by the band America. But when he switches over to one of his own songs, like "College Radio," "Whiskey and Clovers" or "Get My Boots," all that vocal styling has already prepared you to be as big a fan of the originals as the songs you know.

That's the goal for any musician who's made performing their full-time job, as Gomez has: To get the crowd to remember your music as much as they remember your cover of "Folsom Prison Blues," a song that lots of bands and performers can play. And he's a hard worker. We won't enumerate each here, but there are well over 150 shows on his schedule right now, and he books more as they become available in advance. This really is full time work, and he tells us he's doing reasonably own flavor. During one part of well.

Gomez has already released a full length album and one other EP, and the reason for our visit is the release of another EP, "Drunk at Church." Immediately following the show, Gomez orders a plate of Rhein Haus' famous pork schnitzel and kraut and we sit down to talk.

When asked what he's learned between the first EP and now about telling a story in a shorter format than a full length record, he tells us that he prefers it. "To me, it's less stressful than a full length album. I feel [for a full length] you have to have not only a broader style of songs, but they still have to be cohesive, right? An EP allows you to kind of have little quadrants of just four songs that can say a lot."

Like his first EP, College Radio, there's a title track from the name of the record for the upcoming release. So when can you hear "Drunk at Church"? Along with the rest of us, your first listen will be May 15, when the EP comes out.

Until then, you can hear him anytime on Spotify or follow him on Instagram @andrugomezmusic. at For upcoming shows, you can visit his website at andrugomezmusic.com. Some here in North Central Washington include a late afternoon show in Manson on May 22 at Tipsy Canyon Winery, an evening show at Wenatchee Valley Brewing in the Riverside District on May 24, and just down the road from there for another afternoon set at Pybus' Off The Hill tasting room on May 25.

WENATCHEE — It's Apple Awards time again, when we celebrate high school theater, both plays and musicals, and give the equivalent of Tony awards to actresses, actors and crew. What used to be an honor given only by a student's own school has six schools participating all together for one giant night of awards and honors presented by Wenatchee's own Barrett Family.

Hosted and directed by Brian Higgins, and produced by Kylee Boggs and Alex Haley, the Apple Awards serve to highlight the excellence and innovation and creativity that these young minds create, giving us their all in return for nothing but the experience.

And make no mistake: High school theater is a lot harder than you might suppose. Just as football players start practicing in full gear when the summer sun is still high overhead, theater kids put in long hours and dedicate all of their free time to perfecting something for your entertainment.

There's not a slouch in the bunch of this year's nominees. The high schools involved are Cashmere, Chelan, Eastmont, Ephrata, Quincy and Wenatchee, and the productions that nominations are drawn from are just as varied as the communities that these young people are from.

If you want a sneak peek at the up-and-comers in the Wenatchee Valley's vibrant theater community, find your way to the Numerica PAC on Thursday, May 15 at 7 p.m. (doors open at 6:30 p.m.). Tickets are $15 for students and $20 for adults, and can be found at the PAC's Box Office. by phone at 509-663-ARTS (2787) or on the PAC website.

as you get used to the pattern of him laying down rhythm guitar and playing harmony fills over the top, he begins to use vocal effects as well. Not with fancy electronics; Gomez has a variety of singing styles carried within his bass-baritone range, and has stretched it into even a higher-ranged head voice useful in parts of the songs.

During this show, and as we found out later during an interview, Gomez intersperses plenty of original music, playing only enough cover songs to make people feel at home with hints of things they recognize. And by "hints," we mean that Gomez is playing a song that you eventually recognize, but only after he's given it his
