MANSON - The Manson Chamber of Commerce is settling into its new home on Wapato Way and will be ready for residents to check it out at an open house next month.

Susan Templeton, manager of the chamber's visitor center, said the new location has more space and is in a more prominent location than their previous spot on Hale Street.

"The new location is great," she said. "We've had a lot more traffic coming into the visitor center just because of the location, and we have our big yellow chair out front, which is welcoming everyone in."

"Volunteers helped us get this up and going," she said. "It was amazing."

"We have a great community of people who are so helpful, and if they see activity going on, the first thing they do is come in and say, 'can we help?'," she said. "So we had people painting and carpet laying and cleaning for two months."

The new space has a Visitor Information Center with local pamphlets and brochures and a small souvenir shop with wine glasses, coffee cups, tshirts and sweatshirts and more.

NCW Braver Angels to host civic forum on executive orders

NCW News Ward Media

CHELAN — The North Central Washington chapter of Braver Angels is launching a new initiative called the "Bridging the Divide Series," beginning with a civic forum focused on presidential executive orders later this month. The inaugural event, titled "The Stroke of a Pen - Understanding Executive Orders," will take place on May 29 from 5:00 to 7:00 p.m. at the Chelan Fire Station, located at 232 E. Wapato Ave. in Chelan.

According to organizers, the forum will examine various perspectives on "the historical and current use of Presidential executive orders to govern." The event is structured to encourage broad participation, and organizers emphasize that "in-depth knowledge of Presidential executive orders is not required" for attendees.

Braver Angels, a national organization, describes itself as being "committed to bringing together 'Red' and 'Blue' perspectives in a respectful way to help strengthen our democratic republic." The local chapter states it is "dedicated to fostering widespread commitment to increasing civil dialogue on complex and challenging public policy issues in North Central Washington."

The May 29 forum is free to attend, but space is limited to 60 participants. Registration is being handled through Eventbrite under "Braver Angels, Chelan, May 29.

The big yellow chair welcomes Manson visitors in to learn more about the community and all that it has to offer.

The chamber was closed for all of February and March while they prepared the new location, which is the old Wells Fargo bank building. Before they could open the doors they needed to install new carpeting and there was a lot of cleaning and painting to be done, Templeton said. All of the work was done by volunteers.

The new location also has a small meeting space, which allows them to hold some community meetings of up to eight people. The new space opened in April but will be officially ready for an open house on Saturday, June 28 from 1-4 p.m. at its new location at 590 E. Wapato Way.

Ferguson signs budget boosting Washington state spending and taxes

By JERRY CORNFIELD AND JAKE GOLDSTEIN-STREET Washington State Standard

OLYMPIA — Washington Gov. Bob Ferguson entered office warning that a multibillion-dollar budget shortfall would require spending cuts and, as a last resort, higher taxes.

On Tuesday, May 20, the first-term Democrat appeared satisfied with lawmakers' work to close the financial gap, signing a two-year state budget and a tax package to produce billions of dollars in new revenue to keep it in balance.

"To get a budget in a challenging situation to the finish line, it's going to require working together and a lot of compromise," Ferguson said. "I believe we accomplished that with this budget."

Ferguson's approval ended weeks of speculation about whether he would reject tax increases in favor of deeper cuts. It also capped off months of wrangling between the governor and Democratic lawmakers over how far to go in raising taxes. Republicans slammed Ferguson for agreeing to the hikes after he'd voiced support for greater fiscal restraint.

This all came in the face of an estimated $16 billion shortfall over the next two budget cycles and uncertainty about federal funding.

Also Tuesday, the governor approved a 6-cent increase in Washington's gas tax to ensure planned transportation projects move forward.

In the end, he only used his veto power to remove one significant piece of a tax bill, related to community banks, and to nix about $25 million from the operating budget.

Sen. June Robinson, D-Everett, the lead budget writer in the Senate, said she was "very pleased" with the limited use of the veto pen.

"I think he's sincere and understands the difficult decisions that were made," she said. "The fact that he didn't make significant changes shows he respects our views."

The two-year operating budget signed Tuesday calls for $77.8 billion in spending across government, including public schools and colleges, health care, social services, housing, corrections, and environmental protection. It also funds new twoyear collective bargaining agreements with most, but not all, public employee unions.

It relies on about $4 billion from new and higher taxes and transfers from other accounts into the general fund, the central pot of money used to pay for most state spending. The state will end the fiscal cycle with $225 million in cash reserves and $2 billion in its emergency, or rainy day, fund.

The suite of revenue bills inked by Ferguson includes a permanent across-the-board boost in business taxes, a temporary surcharge on highgrossing firms, and higher tax rates on large financial institutions and computing giants. Sales tax would be applied to more services, some tax breaks disappear, and an existing tax on tobacco products gets broadened to include nicotine pouches, like Zvn.

A wide swath of private sector firms and health care providers urged Ferguson to reject some of the measures, insisting higher costs would be passed on to customers and patients. For the most part, he did not heed their requests.

However, he restored a tax break for community banks that allows for a tax deduction for interest they receive on loans for residential property. That exemption helps people afford housing, he said. It will trim the tax package by $215 million over four years, a state budget official said.

Republicans panned the governor's approval of the taxes as an about-face.

"On his first day in office, Governor Ferguson spoke of fiscal responsibility, yet today he's supporting the largest tax increase in state history," Senate Minority Leader John Braun, R-Centralia, said in a statement. "That's disappointing. The majority Democrats who don't believe government can ever have enough money were unhappy with him back then; they must be elated now."

Ferguson said he planned to further scrutinize the tax

"There are some revenues there that I think require a closer look to make sure there are not unintended consequences," he interim.

told reporters Tuesday. "So I would not be surprised if you see some changes beyond technical changes to those revenue streams."

increases on businesses in the Critics of where majority Democrats landed point out that state spending with the operating budget has increased from roughly $38 billion to upward of $70 billion over the past decade. Spending in the current two-year budget cycle that ends June 30 is around $72 billion.

Transportation budget also rides on tax hikes

Ferguson also approved separate spending plans for transportation and capital construction for the 2025-27 biennium that begins July 1.

The $15.5billion transportation spending plan funds Washington State Ferries, highway megaprojects and maintenance of state roads and bridges. Washington State Patrol and public transportation are also paid for through this budget. And there's over a billion dollars for the court-ordered removal of barriers to fish in waterways that cross under state roads.

Similar to the operating budget, transportation faced a major shortfall due to diminishing gas tax receipts

To fill the gap, Ferguson signed a separate six-year, $3.2 billion transportation revenue package intended to pay for promised infrastructure. While the state's first gas tax hike since 2016 anchors it, there are a number of other new and higher fees and taxes, including on rental cars, noncommercial aircraft, luxury vehicles and car sales, among others.

Washington's gas tax already among the highest in the nation — will rise from 49.4 cents to 55.4 cents per gallon in July, then by 2% each year.

"The people of the state of Washington expect us to invest in those projects, but we have limited revenue options right now," Ferguson said. "The gas tax, unfortunately, is one of them."

The capital budget authorizes $7.6 billion in new spending. It will drive $760 million into affordable housing, most of it through the Housing Trust Fund. There's nearly a billion dollars for K-12 school construction, plus funds for salmon recovery and behavioral health facilities.

How we got here

In the final weeks of the session, Ferguson objected to budgets passed in the House and Senate, saying they each relied too much on taxes. At that time, he called on lawmakers to "immediately move budget discussions in a different direction."

Before that, he refused a proposed "wealth tax" on investments held by the richest Washingtonians. He felt the new tax was sure to face legal challenges that could threaten the stability of the state's budget and that it would be difficult to implement.

But Ferguson didn't rule out a special session before then to deal with potential havoc wreaked by the Trump administration or cuts under consideration by the Republican-controlled Congress. He said federal funds make up about one-fifth of Washington's budget.

The state will get its next forecast for revenue estimates in June.

The Big 5

Five tax bills signed Tuesday, May 20, are counted on to bring in roughly $3.6 billion for the next budget and $9.4 billion over four years. Here's where those dollars would come from. House Bill 2081, the largest money maker, is projected to generate $2.1 billion in the next budget. It has an across-the-board boost in business taxes, a temporary surcharge on high-grossing firms and higher tax rates on large financial institutions and computing giants. Senate Bill 5814 is relied on to raise $1 billion for the next biennium, mostly by applying the retail sales tax to more services, such as digital advertising and temporary staffing. There is also a provision to begin taxing certain products with nicotine, like Zyn pouches. Senate Bill 5813 will bring in $321 million by adding a layer to the capital gains tax. In addition to the existing 7% tax on gains over $270,000 from

In response, Democratic lawmakers dropped the idea for this year. The new governor also opposed a proposal to repeal a voter-approved limit on property tax growth in Washington, so legislators abandoned that, as well.

By the time Democrats' slate of revenue proposals reached the governor's desk, lawmakers had dropped it from a total of $21 billion over four years to $9.4 billion, excluding the separate transportation taxes and fees.

Lawmakers are scheduled to next return to Olympia in January, when they will hash out a supplemental funding plan for the final year of the cycle.

the sale or exchange of longterm assets, another 2.9% will be levied on gains above $1 million

Senate Bill 5794 aims to bring in $148.5 million by getting rid of a variety of tax breaks enjoyed by around 4,000 taxpayers, including operators of self-service storage facilities and sellers of precious metal bullion. House Bill 2077 is expected to generate $54.5 million with a new tax on the sale of electric vehicle credits between automakers. Wenatchee Valley College cuts programs amid state budget shortfall

By Andrew Simpson Ward Media Staff Reporter

WENATCHEE — When money is tight, all good things must come to an end. And unfortunately, the state budget shortfall is affecting more than just services provided directly by the state. Many colleges that get funding from Washington's general fund or education fund are facing the same difficult choices that Wenatchee Valley College has had to contend with in light of the state's $12 billion funding deficit.

After collaborating with the Faculty Budget and Program Review Taskforce, administrators at the school set out a list of recommendations for suspensions of programs and courses. Those include:

- Bachelor of Applied Science program in Engineering Technology
- Music Direct Transfer

Major Related Program Transitional Studies/ English Language Learning

Level A and B courses • Drama and Theater • Bachelor of Applied Science

- program for Teaching Machining
- Graphic Design
- Natural Resources, specifically the Associate of Applied Science Transfer Degree

The college will continue to provide a "pathway" for Natural Resources within the general transfer degree program.

The school is also facing some staffing changes as a result of cost-cutting efforts. A Sustainability position that was funded by a grant that has now expired will be suspended unless further grant money can be found, and a counseling position at the school will face the same fate when the grant for that expires at the end of the fiscal year.

Administrators took into consideration enrollment, student demand, transfer and employment outcomes, costeffectiveness and potential for alternative pathways to serve student needs when deciding on these recommendations. Some discipline-specific courses and certificates will be retained as electives.

Coordinated efforts between programs and Deans are working to identify alternatives for alreadyenrolled students to ensure that they are able to complete their studies. The school is even considering some noncredit training programs to meet employment needs.

Dr. Tod Treat, the Vice President of Instruction, said in a statement, "While we have done everything we can to minimize the impact

WA State issues outdoor burn safety guidelines as summer approaches

NCW News Ward Media

OLYMPIA The Washington State Fire Marshal's Office released safety guidelines for outdoor burning activities as the state enters the summer season, citing concerns about increased fire risks during drier weather conditions.

According to data released by the office, Washington State Fire Agencies reported 2,652 fire incidents in outdoor areas during 2024. Officials are urging residents to exercise caution when engaging in activities such as barbecuing, gathering around fire pits, and campfires.

"When recreational burning is allowed in your area, it is critical to follow proper precautions to reduce the risk of accidental fires," stated Deputy State Fire Marshal Courtney Chambers in the official release. "Be sure to regularly check for current burn bans and local fire restrictions, which may change based on weather and fire danger levels."

The safety guidelines include maintaining minimum distances between fire sources and structures, with fire pits to be positioned at least 10 feet from homes and other combustible structures, and campfires at least 25 feet from tents and vegetation.

Other key recommendations include:

- · Checking for current burn bans before any open flame activity
- · Cleaning grills thoroughly to prevent grease fires
 - · Keeping flammable mate-
 - rials at least 3 feet from heat sources
 - leaving fires Never unattended
- Maintaining a readily available water source or fire extinguisher
- · Fully extinguishing all fires

Annual Discover Pass cost set to increase in October

NCW News Ward Media

OLYMPIA — Starting Oct. 1, the annual Discover Pass will increase from $30 to $45, marking the first price hike since the program was implemented in 2011.

The Discover Pass is required to park vehicles at Washington's state parks and lands operated by the Washington Department of Fish & Wildlife and Washington Department of Natural Resources.

Gov. Bob Ferguson signed the legislation into law on May 17 after the bill passed the Legislature in April. Despite the fee increase, the Washington State Parks and Recreation Commission will not see significant new revenue in the 2025-27 biennium.

"The revenue from these fees are a core funding stream to keep state parks open, staffed and operational," according to state officials. "Throughout the summer and early fall, we'll be updating our website and communicating to customers about the fee and other changes."

In response to the state's budget shortfall, lawmakers reduced general fund funding for State Parks will now come from earned revenue in the 2025-27 biennium, up from about 65% in the current budget cycle.

The legislation also modified requirements for off-road vehicles and made changes related to the Lifetime Disabled Veteran's pass. Details of these changes are available on the Discover Pass website.

Washington's state park system, established in 1913, predates the National Parks system. It manages 124 developed parks, 1,300 miles of trails, more than 6,000 campsites and over 2,700 facilities, including more than 800 historic buildings.

Despite overseeing the smallest acreage among statemanaged lands agencies, Washington's state parks receive the most visitors – more than 40 million annually, including 39 million day-use visitors and 2.3 million overnight guests.

Approximately 82% of State Parks staff work on the ground to maintain parks and ensure they remain "open, clean, safe and fun for visitors," officials said

WENATCHEE — Deborah Kelly, public affairs specialist for the Okanogan–Wenatchee National Forest, has announced that the Forest will be moving to primarily cashless fee collections at most recreation fee sites. The sites that use the new payment system will include all trailheads and day use sites that require a fee or pass, as well as nearly all first-come, first-served campgrounds, including those operated by concession stands or booths.

You can prepare in advance for this change by downloading the recreation.gov mobile app. Doing so beforehand ensures to download it in the middle of the woods. If you forget to download it in advance, you will need to find an area with WiFi or mobile connectivity to download the app and set up an account. Once you have done so, the scan-and-pay application will work in offline mode at recreation areas with no cellular or WiFi service.

As the summer continues, the cashless system will continue to be deployed across the National Forest to eventually include all first-come, firstcampgrounds, served including concessionaire sites. You can check the payment status of the campground you wish to visit by going to the U.S. Forest Service (USFS)

By eliminating cash and check payment options, the USFS hopes to streamline the entire process, and thus free up staff for helping visitors and maintaining recreation sites. An automated system eliminates the need for check processing and cash deposits.

You can also still purchase and use (for all day use sites requiring a fee) the Northwest Forest Pass or America the Beautiful Interagency Pass at an office or in a store found on the agency's website at https://www.fs.usda.gov/r06/ okanogan-wenatchee/passesor simply purchase them online.

campgrounds, cabins and lookouts operated by the agency staff or by concessionaires that are available for reservation prior to arrival in the Okanogan-Wenatchee National Forest. These sites are booked in advance through the website and will not be affected in any way by the payment system transition.

Fees and passes for recreation sites are one of the largest sources of revenue for the maintenance and operation of them, and improve the experience of visitors to the National Forest.

In 1980, a search began for an artist to design a special monument to honor the members of the military who died fighting in the Vietnam War. A contest was announced, and artists from coast to coast sent in designs.

SURFACE DIFFERENT DESIGNED

A memorial by a young college student named Maya Lin was chosen. Her design was any other memorial in America. And at first, many people didn't like it because it looked so Maya Lin's design was two long black granite that formed a V shape. On the shiny and smooth of the wall are the of more than 58,000 soldiers who died or went missing in the Vietnam War.

In the United States, the last Monday in May every year is Memorial Day. It's a special day for us to remember those who died while serving our nation in the military and keeping us safe.

A Powerful Monument

The Vietnam Veterans Memorial opened in 1982. Visitors to the monument soon realized how powerful and special Maya Lin's design was, and each year about 5 million people visit it. Visitors often leave photos, flowers, flags, and military items at the wall in honor of a soldier they knew.

Many people use paper and crayons to make a rubbing of a friend or loved one's name as a keepsake of the memorial.

With crayons and paper, make rubbings of different surfaces around your home. Place the paper over the surface, and use the side of the crayon to make each rubbing.

Expanding the Memorial

In 1984, a statue called Three Servicemen was added near the wall. The metal statue was designed by Frederick Hart and honors those who fought and returned from the Vietnam War.

The Vietnam Women's Memorial added in 1993, is a sculpture of three servicewomen caring for a wounded soldier. Artist Glenna Goodacre said that the soldier in the sculpture is saved by these brave women.
